A ROUSING RALLY.

Immense Republican Meeting at Cooper Institute.

Enthusiastic Manifestation in Favor of the National and State Tickets.

Speeches by Secretary Boutwell, Speaker Blaine, and Others.

Thorough Exposition of the Financial Policy of Gen. Grant.

The Record of His Administration Forcibly Reviewed.

The eighth and last weekly meeting held at the Cooper Institute under the auspices of the Republican State Committee last night, was a worthy close to the efforts of the Empire City for Gen. Grant's re-election. At 6½ o'clock, the streets and avenues around the Institute were thronged by persons of every social grade, anxiously watching the doors in the hope of getting good seats. When 7 o'clock came, the hall was thrown open, and such a rush was made that the flooring and stairs trembled under the pressure. In ten minutes there was not room for another being in the auditorium. The stage, too, was fully occupied by the best men in the business community. After the round of applause which greeted the advent of the distinguished orators of the evening, Secretary Boutwell and Speaker Blaine, A. H. Cornell nominated Hon. Isaac H. Bailey for President, who said that, in view of the fact that Mr. Blaine's campaign had had a serious effect on his voice, he should make but few remarks, and asked the further pleasure of the meeting.

Gen. Sharpe then read the following list of Vice-Presidents:

REMARKS OF THE CHAIRMAN.

Mr. Bailey said: Ladies and Gentlemen—We have with us to-night a distinguished officer of the Government, who comes forward to give an account of his stewardship. There have been some complaints of the interference of Federal officials in this election, but I think it a good sign that the chief officer of the Government comes here, ready to give you a stamping of the chisel touched or his care; and I think he will give such an account as will convince you that the Government SECRETARY, as it will have, a triumphant reelection. I have the pleasure of introducing to you Mr. Boutwell.

SPEECH OF HON. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL.

Mr. Boutwell was received with tremendous applause, the ladies waving their handkerchiefs and the gentlemen throw hats as he rose to speak. He said:

A month since, ladies and gentlemen, I should have done upon this platform what more than I do at the importance of Wharton in the duty which I am expected to perform tonight. Within that month the judgment of the people of this country has been so far expressed that a meeting of Republicans now is rather an assembly of triumph than an occasion for argument with reference to the result of the canvass. If the elections in North Carolina, and in Vermont and Maine—(applause)—did not prove satisfactorily to the friends and the opponents of the present Administration, that Gen. Grant was to be elected, no doubt can exist now in the mind of any reasonable person, since the expression of opinion in the great Central States of the Union, from which there can be no successful appeal. [Applause.] Various reasons have been given by our opponents for the results; but I have not seen stated by them what seems to me, to be the true one. The truth is to be found in the fact that the people of this country act upon their serious and earnest convictions of political affairs, and not as the followers of individual men—much less do they act under the influence of passion or of prejudice; and, therefore, they have considered the statements of our opponents, and the arguments and facts of the friends of the Administration, and the result is before the country, and before the world. [Loud applause.] I do not consider it out of place, gentlemen, for me to speak of the President in his personal and official character, but I shall not speak of the calumnies of which he has been the subject.

THE CALUMNIES AGAINST THE PRESIDENT.

I remember that in all the trying periods of the country's history, the men who have been charged with great duties have also been assailed. You, in your own family history, know that those first in office whom I am proud to have in the most honorable positions of public service was himself the subject of calumny; but the justification—aye, the satisfaction, even, which comes to the country, as well as to the subjects of these calumnies, is in the just judgment of the people, who, when the facts are laid before them, see to it that no permanent injuries remain. And so those who have been the subjects of calumny, without the power of calumny upon their garments; and so will it be of him today, who, after great public service, is assailed in the heat of a political canvass. The calumnies will be forgotten. [Applause.] Happy the men who originated them if they, too, shall be permitted to pass into oblivion. If some of you have seen the President, whether as General of the army, as General of the armies of the Republic, or since he has been Chief Magistrate of the nation, you have seen him as he always is, quiet, decorous, unassuming in all the relations of public and private life. That sentence I utter after an acquaintance with him of eight years, and after an intimate acquaintance of three and a half years. Under no circumstances shall I stoop to mention the nature of the calumnies now alleged against him, but I come to speak of his character.

GEN. GRANT'S CHARACTER.

It is said that he is not a man of intellectual capacity; a man who has lived forty years in a country where the avenues to distinction are open alike to every man. Like Cromwell, who, you will remember, came in the exercise of the public service to be the protector of England, and who established its power in all the national and international affairs of the continent of Europe, whatever may after wards be the judgment of men as to the wisdom of his policy, there is none as to the nature of his intellectual endowments. It would be strange in this century if in a time of great national peril, one to whom was given the command of a million of men, and who commanded them successfully, and who carried the nation through a severe contest, if there should rees any doubt upon the minds of the people of that generation whether he has intellectual capacity or not. And he possesses those qualities which have made the soldiers and the statesmen—freedom from passion, absence of political capacity, to select men for important service, and he possesses the "roundabout common sense" quality in men which, without irreverence, I think may be described as something like that which is ascribed to infinite power, with reference to a limited thing, which enables the possessor at that power to see the subject under investigation precisely as it is, and then he possesses the capacity to act on his judgment in time to meet the requirements of the case.

THE GIFT OF PUBLIC SPEECH.

Now it is a circumstance worthy a moment's consideration that Gen. Grant is not gifted in public discussion, and what good fortune it was for others if they failed in the same respect. Gentlemen, there is no necessary connection between the ability to speak in public and to administer public affairs; and, indeed, I think it may safely be said that the teaching of history and the results of experience that men who are largely endowed with capacities in that direction, and who cultivate them assiduously, are by that natural endowment and that training unfitted for the serious substantial business of statesmanship in time of peril. Lord Bacon sister Isaac said: "Words are the daughters of men. The sons of God are deeds; and therefore it is that the man of deeds is always greater than the man of words." [Applause.]

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE COUNTRY.

If I interpret correctly the introductory remarks of the Chairman of this meeting, I am expected to say something upon the finances and the financial condition of the country. I know not precisely how to meet that expectation, certainly within the limits of the few moments which I propose to occupy. You know very well all the leading facts of the Administration in that particular; although sometimes our friends, and even our opponents, have insisted that there was something they did not see yet. If anything be true concerning the administration of the Treasury Department it is that: what we have done we have done openly. [Applause.] Gen. Grant, you may remember, in his inaugural address, which looked with prudence to the finances to two results—a faithful collection of the revenue and payment of the public debt. In these three and a half years, following that suggestion, the country has paid more than three hundred and fifty millions dollars of the public debt. [Applause.] To the more than that the debt has been reduced to that extent there may be no great merit. The advantage is chiefly in the establishment of the public credit, and the assurance it gives to the country and to the world that the purpose of the people of the United States is to place the Government free of any responsibility of a pecuniary sort which cannot be met even under adverse circumstances.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

As to the national debt, I remember Mr. Webster, in some moments of great freedom, made a remark like this: "Public debts should be paid, but private debts—that is a different thing." [Laughter.] Gentlemen, there is the subject of debt and which a public debt is of more concern than private debts. It I were to give advice, and as I give it freely and without charge there can be no complaint, and I hope no one will bring it home to me if the result is not accomplished, but I do say that no more can any real property on credit and hold it. Will realize a profit. But with a Government the question is different. In this country the national credit has all the foundation of everything. Today if the public credit were impaired for any reason, the credit of railways, the credit of business institutions, would also be impaired if not undermined and prostrated. Therefore it has seemed to the Administration necessary to take the best possible security for the establishment and maintenance of the public credit. This could only be done by showing to the country and to the world that we had the means and the disposition to pay. The advantages of this policy are not only in the present, but they are certain in the contingencies of the future. No nation can be free from the possibility of a war. But a nation is as favorably situated to escape such calamities as any nation on the face of the earth, and especially now, when the only great question which threatened the peace of the United States has been resolved. [Cheers.] But every nation must look to the possibility of war. War cannot be carried on except by loans. Loans cannot be made except the credit of the party asking the loan is good. Now, then, the result of this policy that has been pursued is that that today the credit of the United States is better than the credit of any other nation on the face of the earth. [Applause.] Don't be ready to doubt the truth of this observation by the circumstance that France has recently made a large loan at the rate of five per cent interest with stupendous rapidity in excess of the amount called for. The truth in regard to that loan is that it was sold to the bankers who put it upon the market at the rate of eighty-four cents on the dollar, while the Government of the United States within the last twelve months has disposed of two hundred millions of five per cent bonds without any discount in the principal markets of Europe. [Cheers.] Secondly the bonds of the United States are salable at or above par in more markets of the world than the bonds of any other country. The adoption of this line in the belief that if the Government of the United States should ask for a loan abroad the capitalists of Europe would say the see end of the opportunity to lend us money.

INTERNAL REVENUE RECEIPTS.

A large part of the means for thus reducing the public debt has been derived from the internal revenue collections of the public revenues. I am not telling you trade your patience permit me to present a statement of facts for the purpose of demonstrating this. But I can say in one sentence which is true, and in no sense can it be called—what would be thought if we were to open up on the Treasury door the words, "To resume is to resume"? Therefore, it seems to me that if you are satisfied with Gen. Grant's ideas of these questions you should trust to his Administration. Allow me to say in conclusion, that in my opinion, as it is that if every man conversant with the course of trade in this country, that, as the financial interests of this country are represented by New-York City, it will become, twenty-five years hence, the financial center of the world. The speaker then retired, amid prolonged applause.

The Chairman then introduced Hon. James G. Blaine, who spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF SPEAKER BLAINE.

MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: When the Constitution of the United States was framed in NW. Mr. Jefferson was in Europe representing this country at the Court of France, and he returned, as you know, to take part in the Administration of Gen. Washington. Upon his representation the State of Virginia proposed to the Constitution of the United States eleven amendments, to protect in better form, as Mr. Jefferson thought, personal rights. Ten eleven amendments were perfected during Gen. Washington's first term, and were known publicly in that day as the Bill of Rights. Twelve years afterward there was an animated contest for the Presidency between Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Adams, first before the people, and afterward still more embittered between Jefferson and Aaron Burr in the House of Representatives, and the end of the contest disclosed that one feature of the Constitution did not work well, in relation to the mode in which electors should vote for President and Vice-President; and, to remedy the defect that developed, a twelfth amendment was proposed to the Constitution. That amendment was perfected in 1803, and from that day to the Administration of Abraham Lincoln the Constitution remained unchanged and untouched. [Cheers.] The Framers of that instrument purposely made it difficult to alter or amend it. Legislation was left to the will of the majority, favorable or adverse; but to change the Constitution, as you all know, it was made to require a vote of two-thirds of the Senate and two-thirds of the House to as much as propose an amendment, and then three-fourths of all the States to ratify it before it should be incorporated into the organic instrument.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Sixty-three years after the Twelfth Amendment a Thirteenth Amendment was added; and it has been the singular fortune of this generation, which will never be experienced by any other, that it has been twice amended the Constitution of the United States in three particulars. Neither to generations of the fathers or the grandfathers of most of those whom I now have the honor to address—you must go back to your great-grandfathers before you reach the condition that existed in a single line of that instrument. And yet we, of today, have made three great essential changes to that Constitution.

Seven years after the last hostile gun was fired in the civil war, you are asked to point out the line and to read to the fruits to that struggle. What answer have you to give? The physical union of the States was, of course, maintained; the rebels were beaten and dispersed; but when you come to speak of the living present and foreseen the future, you point to the fruits of that great struggle; for in Mr. Lincoln's term was perfected the great Thirteenth Amendment, which, in three short lines, abolished slavery throughout the whole land, and proclaimed liberty to all the inhabitants thereof, making it impossible that the foot of a slave shall touch the soil of this land, that a slave could breathe the air of the United States and live. [Cheers.]

But this amendment perfected, it was soon found that merely declaring a man not to be a slave did not complete the work. It left him in other words, the not ends and endow him with the power to maintain himself in his new condition; and the same difficulty that existed before the war confronted us afterward, when the Thirteenth Amendment was in your Constitution. In the place where the rights of that instrument was there declared, and nowhere was there understood, and nowhere was there acknowledged, a common standard of American citizenship. It was written in the old Constitution that the citizens of each State should be entitled to all the rights and immunities of citizens of the several States. And, as between the great States that swept the North from ocean to ocean, that guarantee was fulfilled; but the moment you crossed the imaginary line South, and having a dark complexion, you availed yourself of that section, be you white or your complexion, you undertook in certain Southern States to exercise the right of free speech, the heritage which belongs to New-Englanders, and to great free States of old, your life was no more worth than the life of a dog. This was the great practical grievance. It fell upon us in many practical and offensive ways. My own State, largely devoted to navigation, shared in its insults and outrages. A Maine ship going to Charleston for a cotton freight might well have among her crew two or three colored men. On her arrival at Charleston, those colored sailors were arrested, imprisoned and detained while the ship remained in port. The ship had to pay the expenses of their maintenance, and should she depart without defraying the expense, the men might be sold into hopeless slavery in order to raise the amount. But if on the same day a British ship should arrive in the harbor of Charleston with an entire crew of negroes, they were as safe in the city as you are today in the City of New-York. This it was that the British flag in an American port carried with it a larger measure of personal protection than the American flag did. This was so outrageous a grievance that the State of Massachusetts, foremost always in good, and with the Charleston case of her best citizens and distinguished citizens, the late Samuel Hoar. The older portion of this audience remember the result of that mission. He was met by an infuriated mob, and had it not been for the considerate interference of some of the better disposed citizens of that city he might have been spit in in the street, to the eternal infamy of the name of Charleston.

AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

Thus when the war began and thus when the war closed, there was no standard of American citizenship; for the ground on which South Carolina attempted this disqualification was that neither Maine, nor New-York, nor Massachusetts had the rights to make a man a citizen who could not call himself a citizen within the limits of South Carolina. At the beginning of the war and at its close this great question of American citizenship was an unsettled and vexed question. Therefore the Republican Party took the next great step, and proposed to the States, through their representatives in Congress, Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution defined to remove the evils of which I have spoken; and I venture to say, with deliberate weighing of my words, that from the hour in which the immortal Declaration was made in Philadelphia in 1776, there has been no word of dignity by the State by written on this instrument of more far-reaching importance to you and your children and your children's children than the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. [Cheers.] Allow me to read it. It is as follows:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States."

Mark you, all persons born, no matter what color, and all persons naturalized, no matter what nativity, are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside." That is the affirmative and positive part of the amendment. The negative part is still more potential and still more permanent. It is as follows:

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life or liberty or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

And then those singular words are added:

There you have the great features—first, the positive declaration of what should constitute American citizenship; second, the taking away from the States of all power to interfere with those rights; and, third, the delegation to Congress in express terms of all power necessary to protect those rights.

Now, under that a case arose, and a case of great magnitude, and it arose thus: When the war closed, the most sanguine among us could hardly expect that there would immediately ensue law and order in the South. The transition had been too great; passions had been too deeply aroused, and therefore it was naturally expected, and a due charitable allowance was given to a certain degree of disorder, and possibly to a certain measure of strife and anarchy. But it was soon found that no charity was broad enough to cover that which ensued; for this State of Ku-Klux Klan, which at first was a mere jest, became a reality, instead of being sporadic and accidental, it became organized, and throughout the length and breadth of the States then recently in revolt there was found a vast conspiracy against the rights of person and property of half the Union. I hold the peculiar devotion and peculiar loyalty to the Government of the United States, and within the years, dating from the day that Lee surrendered to Gen. Grant, down to the month of April, 1871, by the report of a Congressional Committee, made up of members of the Senate and of the House, there was not a man, both parties because of their character and ability—a report in the Archives of the Government today, showing that within those six years in the States that had been in revolt, there were seven men who were made the victims of the conspiracy by being slain, maimed, maltreated or murdered. And more than five thousand unwilling witnesses—what would be thought if we were to open up on the Treasury door the words, "To resume is to resume"? Therefore, it seems to me that if you are satisfied with Gen. Grant's ideas of these questions you should trust to his Administration. Allow me to say in conclusion, that in my opinion, as it is that if every man conversant with the course of trade in this country, that, as the financial interests of this country are represented by New-York City, it will become, twenty-five years hence, the financial center of the world. Mark you, all persons born, no matter what color, and all persons naturalized, no matter what nativity, are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside." That is the affirmative and positive part of the amendment. The negative part is still more potential and still more permanent. It is as follows:

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life or liberty or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

And then those singular words are added:

There you have the great features—first, the positive declaration of what should constitute American citizenship; second, the taking away from the States of all power to interfere with those rights; and, third, the delegation to Congress in express terms of all power necessary to protect those rights.

Now, under that a case arose, and a case of great magnitude, and it arose thus: When the war closed, the most sanguine among us could hardly expect that there would immediately ensue law and order in the South. The transition had been too great; passions had been too deeply aroused, and therefore it was naturally expected, and a due charitable allowance was given to a certain degree of disorder, and possibly to a certain measure of strife and anarchy. But it was soon found that no charity was broad enough to cover that which ensued; for this State of Ku-Klux Klan, which at first was a mere jest, became a reality, instead of being sporadic and accidental, it became organized, and throughout the length and breadth of the States then recently in revolt there was found a vast conspiracy against the rights of person and property of half the Union. I hold the peculiar devotion and peculiar loyalty to the Government of the United States, and within the years, dating from the day that Lee surrendered to Gen. Grant, down to the month of April, 1871, by the report of a Congressional Committee, made up of members of the Senate and of the House, there was not a man, both parties because of their character and ability—a report in the Archives of the Government today, showing that within those six years in the States that had been in revolt, there were seven men who were made the victims of the conspiracy by being slain, maimed, maltreated or murdered. And more than five thousand unwilling witnesses—what would be thought if we were to open up on the Treasury door the words, "To resume is to resume"? Therefore, it seems to me that if you are satisfied with Gen. Grant's ideas of these questions you should trust to his Administration. Allow me to say in conclusion, that in my opinion, as it is that if every man conversant with the course of trade in this country, that, as the financial interests of this country are represented by New-York City, it will become, twenty-five years hence, the financial center of the world. The speaker then retired, amid prolonged applause.

The Chairman then introduced Hon. James G. Blaine, who spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF SPEAKER BLAINE.

MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: When the Constitution of the United States was framed in NW. Mr. Jefferson was in Europe representing this country at the Court of France, and he returned, as you know, to take part in the Administration of Gen. Washington. Upon his representation the State of Virginia proposed to the Constitution of the United States eleven amendments, to protect in better form, as Mr. Jefferson thought, personal rights. Ten eleven amendments were perfected during Gen. Washington's first term, and were known publicly in that day as the Bill of Rights. Twelve years afterward there was an animated contest for the Presidency between Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Adams, first before the people, and afterward still more embittered between Jefferson and Aaron Burr in the House of Representatives, and the end of the contest disclosed that one feature of the Constitution did not work well, in relation to the mode in which electors should vote for President and Vice-President; and, to remedy the defect that developed, a twelfth amendment was proposed to the Constitution. That amendment was perfected in 1803, and from that day to the Administration of Abraham Lincoln the Constitution remained unchanged and untouched. [Cheers.] The Framers of that instrument purposely made it difficult to alter or amend it. Legislation was left to the will of the majority, favorable or adverse; but to change the Constitution, as you all know, it was made to require a vote of two-thirds of the Senate and two-thirds of the House to as much as propose an amendment, and then three-fourths of all the States to ratify it before it should be incorporated into the organic instrument.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Sixty-three years after the Twelfth Amendment a Thirteenth Amendment was added; and it has been the singular fortune of this generation, which will never be experienced by any other, that it has twice amended the Constitution of the United States in three particulars. Neither to generations of the fathers or the grandfathers of most of those whom I now have the honor to address—you must go back to your great-grandfathers before you reach the condition that existed in a single line of that instrument. And yet we, of today, have made three great essential changes to that Constitution.

Seven years after the last hostile gun was fired in the civil war, you are asked to point out the line and to read to the fruits to that struggle. What answer have you to give? The physical union of the States was, of course, maintained; the rebels were beaten and dispersed; but when you come to speak of the living present and foreseen the future, you point to the fruits of that great struggle; for in Mr. Lincoln's term was perfected the great Thirteenth Amendment, which, in three short lines, abolished slavery throughout the whole land, and proclaimed liberty to all the inhabitants thereof, making it impossible that the foot of a slave shall touch the soil of this land, that a slave could breathe the air of the United States and live. [Cheers.]

But this amendment perfected, it was soon found that merely declaring a man not to be a slave did not complete the work. It left him in other words, the not ends and endow him with the power to maintain himself in his new condition; and the same difficulty that existed before the war confronted us afterward, when the Thirteenth Amendment was in your Constitution. In the place where the rights of that instrument was there declared, and nowhere was there understood, and nowhere was there acknowledged, a common standard of American citizenship. It was written in the old Constitution that the citizens of each State should be entitled to all the rights and immunities of citizens of the several States. And, as between the great States that swept the North from ocean to ocean, that guarantee was fulfilled; but the moment you crossed the imaginary line South, and having a dark complexion, you availed yourself of that section, be you white or your complexion, you undertook in certain Southern States to exercise the right of free speech, the heritage which belongs to New-Englanders, and to great free States of old, your life was no more worth than the life of a dog. This was the great practical grievance. It fell upon us in many practical and offensive ways. My own State, largely devoted to navigation, shared in its insults and outrages. A Maine ship going to Charleston for a cotton freight might well have among her crew two or three colored men. On her arrival at Charleston, those colored sailors were arrested, imprisoned and detained while the ship remained in port. The ship had to pay the expenses of their maintenance, and should she depart without defraying the expense, the men might be sold into hopeless slavery in order to raise the amount. But if on the same day a British ship should arrive in the harbor of Charleston with an entire crew of negroes, they were as safe in the city as you are today in the City of New-York. This it was that the British flag in an American port carried with it a larger measure of personal protection than the American flag did. This was so outrageous a grievance that the State of Massachusetts, foremost always in good, and with the Charleston case of her best citizens and distinguished citizens, the late Samuel Hoar. The older portion of this audience remember the result of that mission. He was met by an infuriated mob, and had it not been for the considerate interference of some of the better disposed citizens of that city he might have been spit in in the street, to the eternal infamy of the name of Charleston.

AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

Thus when the war began and thus when the war closed, there was no standard of American citizenship; for the ground on which South Carolina attempted this disqualification was that neither Maine, nor New-York, nor Massachusetts had the rights to make a man a citizen who could not call himself a citizen within the limits of South Carolina. At the beginning of the war and at its close this great question of American citizenship was an unsettled and vexed question. Therefore the Republican Party took the next great step, and proposed to the States, through their representatives in Congress, Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution defined to remove the evils of which I have spoken; and I venture to say, with deliberate weighing of my words, that from the hour in which the immortal Declaration was made in Philadelphia in 1776, there has been no word of dignity by the State by written on this instrument of more far-reaching importance to you and your children and your children's children than the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. [Cheers.] Allow me to read it. It is as follows:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States."

Mark you, all persons born, no matter what color, and all persons naturalized, no matter what nativity, are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside." That is the affirmative and positive part of the amendment. The negative part is still more potential and still more permanent. It is as follows:

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life or liberty or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

And then those singular words are added:

There you have the great features—first, the positive declaration of what should constitute American citizenship; second, the taking away from the States of all power to interfere with those rights; and, third, the delegation to Congress in express terms of all power necessary to protect those rights.

Now, under that a case arose, and a case of great magnitude, and it arose thus: When the war closed, the most sanguine among us could hardly expect that there would immediately ensue law and order in the South. The transition had been too great; passions had been too deeply aroused, and therefore it was naturally expected, and a due charitable allowance was given to a certain degree of disorder, and possibly to a certain measure of strife and anarchy. # THE REGISTRATION.

Interesting Narrative of Commissioner Davenport's Work.

How the Records Were Arranged—The Census Tables Brought Into Requisition—An Efficient Reply to Libelers.

The registration of voters closed on Saturday evening, and, almost simultaneously, there was brought to a substantial completion an unprecedented and gigantic work, intended to prevent and detect frauds upon the ballot-box. This work has been going on for months with a quiet system and energy which reflect the greatest credit upon its author, Mr. Davenport, the Chief Supervisor of Elections. It has been prosecuted unknown to the public, having only been brought to general notice through one of its closing acts, the verification of the Registry. In order that we may give some idea of the completeness and thoroughness of the work, we propose to describe briefly what has been done; but, before going into details, we desire to call attention to the fact that the results of the work will be useful not only this year, but for years to come. The boundaries of election districts may be changed, the mode of registration may be altered, but it will take but a few hours to accommodate the results already obtained to any changed system.

The work was commenced some months since by drawing off from the United States census of 1870 the names of all males over eleven years of age. These names were arranged under the numbers of the houses in which they reside, and all the residents on each single block were brought into a book by themselves, thus requiring about 2,500 books. But besides this, the names of all males over eleven years of age were also arranged in forty-two huge volumes, alphabetically, so that if the name of any man is given, the place of his residence at the time the census of 1870 was taken can be at once ascertained. If he removes and subsequently registers and votes elsewhere in this City, his migrations can be traced and noted on the same books. In both of these records—the block books and the general books—there appear all the details as to age, nativity, naturalization, &c., which the census furnishes. Having thus got the basis of information, the names on the census have been checked by the official records of the Board of Health, showing the deaths since the census was taken, and by the records of convictions of crime and of pardons, found in the office of the Secretary of State. The books made up from the census show about 250,000 names, of which about 20,000 are disposed of by the deaths and convictions. Even if we were to stop here the magnitude of the work would be something appalling. Three hundred and fifty thousand names, with all their personal details, have been arranged, first under the houses in which they reside and those brought into separate books by blocks, and, secondly, the same names have also been arranged alphabetically in the same manner that the Directory gives them; but while the Directory contains only 217,344 names, Mr. Davenport's record contains 350,000 names. Besides this Mr. Davenport has procured maps showing the nature of the buildings upon every lot in this City, and these maps are regularly corrected every thirty days. There can, therefore, be no more registering from vacant lots, churches or unoccupied buildings as has been frequent hitherto.

Having thus brought the census into a shape to make it useful, the same thing was done with the names of the persons registered in 1871, in number 181,507. These names, which were registered alphabetically in each election district, were patiently transferred so as to be arranged under street numbers, and the names were then compared with those on the census of 1870, and the changes noted. The registration of 1872, being by street numbers, the comparison of that with the census of 1870 and the registry of 1871 has been a less difficult work, though a double comparison of 150,000 separate names is by no means an easy matter. This comparison has brought out one very striking and wholly unexpected result, and that is, that at least two-thirds of the voters who have registered this year registered from the same houses in 1871, and were found in the same houses by the census-takers in 1870. This is true in the poorer as well as in the richer portions of the City, and shows a most unexpected permanency in our proverbially nomadic population. But not only have the census of 1870 and the registration of 1871 and 1872 been thus carefully compared, but after the first two days of registration were over this year, and when more than two-thirds of the names had been registered, what became in a great measure a census of all the males of mature years was taken by inquiry from house to house. This was, with the exception of a single Assembly District which was thus canvassed at the close of week before last, all done in five days of last week. It was in this way ascertained by direct inquiry at every house in the City whether persons who had registered really lived at the places stated by them. In order to avoid going over the same ground a second time to verify the registration, with its consequent double annoyance to householders, the Supervisors were directed to ask for the names of all males living in each house, whether registered or not. But not to insist upon information as to any but those actually registered. This process of verifying the registry is expressly authorized, not only by the National, but by the State law, and the Supervisors were provided with authorizations under both laws. As a general thing, the citizens have given the desired information with entire readiness. The only resistance came from a dozen local politicians scattered about the City, and the speedy manner in which these men were made to feel that the law was to be enforced, in spite of political influence, the abuse of needy and ignorant lawyers, and the misrepresentations of reporters soon put an end to all opposition. "Davenport's census," as the reporters are fond of calling it, was completed Saturday night, and contains the name of every male in the City of mature years.

The way in which practical use is to be made of all the information thus obtained, is as follows: If a man is found, in the census of 1870, the registrations of 1871 and 1872 and the census of 1875, it is fair to presume that so far as residence is concerned, he is a voter, and that no further inquiry need be made as to him. The same is true to those who are found on the census of 1870 and the registration of this year, but as to those who appear for the first time both on the registration and census of this year, though presumptively right, a further inquiry at the alleged place of residence is made. If, however, a man who is registered this year cannot be found by inquiry to reside at the place given by him, or is then found for any cause not to be a voter, a warrant is to be issued by the United States Commissioner, upon the proper affidavits, for his arrest, and the warrant will be in the hands of the Supervisor at the poll, to be served by the Marshal when he applies to vote. It is estimated that about 5,000 such names are on the registry. It is intended to publish a list of a considerable portion of these before election day.

But besides this work, considerable subsidiary work has been done. In eight large books are arranged, by street numbers, the number of persons who registered from each in 1871, and also the number who registered in 1872. Whenever any considerable increase appears means are taken to find out whether it is legitimate. In other books the entire registration of this year is arranged, with all the details. These books for which the means of detection those who have registered under the same name in different districts. It also brings to light the fact that the same naturalization papers have been used twice or more, either by the same or different persons. In either case the persons will be arrested on applying to vote. Special means have also been taken to detect the fraudulent naturalization papers issued in 1868. These papers were, it will be remembered, issued by the thousands to persons who not only had no right to them, but who never applied for them, and have since been by the dozens by Democratic politicians. A very large number of these have been detected as fraudulent, and the persons who registered on them will be arrested when they apply to vote, or before, if they can be found. It is possible that the special measures adopted with reference to the fraudulent papers of 1868 may, in some cases, cause annoyance to the few honest citizens who possess papers of that year, but the greatest care is being taken to prevent this. No one who has a fraudulent paper of that year need hope to slip by undetected.

All the work we have described is completed, except a small portion of that connected with the registration of last Friday and Saturday, and that will be completed today, at latest; so that with a week to spare, there will be no hurry or confusion at the last moment. It was with a general knowledge of what was being done, that we confidently asserted, two or three weeks ago, that there would be substantially no fraudulent voting in the City this year. We think those who have carefully read this article, will fully agree with us. The registration is already about 31,000 less than that of 1868, when the Democrats only carried the State by 10,000 majority. We repeat we shall have an honest election this year, for the first time in years, and our citizens will owe that to the unequaled ability, energy, and industry of John I. Davenport. With a knowledge of this fact, they will know how to appreciate the interested abuse which has been showered upon him for a few weeks past. The cry that the "rights of the citizens" have been invaded, simply meant that Tammany repeaters were being shorn of their power, and that Greeley politicians who did not want an honest election, were running to obey a law made and carried out to preserve the purity of the ballot-box.

DUTIES ON FRENCH COMMERCE.

A Proclamation by the President—Discriminating Duties to be Levied on Merchandise Imported in French Vessels.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 30.—The following proclamation was issued today:

By the President of the United States of America:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, Upon information received by me from His Majesty the Emperor of the French that discriminating duties before the date of said information, levied in French ports upon merchandise imported from the countries of its origin in vessels of the United States, were discontinued and abolished, and in pursuance of the provisions of an act of Congress of the 7th of January, 1824, and of an act in addition thereto of the 24th of May, 1828, I did on the 19th day of June, 1869, issue my proclamation, declaring that the discriminating duties before that date levied upon merchandise imported from the countries of its origin into ports of the United States, in French vessels, were, thereby discontinued and abolished; and, whereas, upon information subsequently received by me that the levying of such duties on all merchandise imported into France in vessels of the United States, whether from the country of its origin or from other countries, had been discontinued, I did, on the 20th of November, 1869, in pursuance of the provisions of the acts of Congress, and by the authority in me vested, thereby issue my proclamation, declaring that the discriminating duties before the date levied on merchandise imported into the United States in French vessels, either from the countries of its origin or from other countries, were thereby discontinued and abolished; and whereas, by the provisions of the said acts of Congress of Jan. 7, 1824, and of the 24th of May, 1828, as well as by the terms of said proclamation of the 19th of June, 1869, and of the 20th of November, 1869, the said suspension of discriminating duties upon merchandise imported into the United States in French vessels was granted by the United States on condition that, and to continue so long as, merchandise imported into France in vessels of the United States should be admitted into the ports of France on the terms of exemption from payment of such discriminating duties; and whereas, information has been received by me that by a law of the French Republic passed on the 20th of January, 1872, and published on the 3d of February, 1872, merchandise imported into France in vessels of the United States from countries other than the United States, is, with the exception of certain articles enumerated in said law, subjected to discriminating duties; and whereas, by the operation of said law of the French Republic of the 20th of January, 1872, the exemption of French vessels and their cargoes granted by the terms of the said proclamation of the 19th of January, 1869, and of the 20th of November, 1869, in accordance with the provisions of the acts of Congress aforesaid has ceased to be reciprocal on the part of France toward vessels owned by citizens of the United States, and their cargoes. Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by an act of Congress of the 7th day of January, 1824, and by an act additional thereto of the 24th day of May, 1828, do hereby declare and proclaim that on and after this date the said suspension of the collection of discriminating duties upon merchandise imported into the States in French vessels, from countries other than France provided for by my said proclamation of the 19th day of June, 1869, and the 20th day of November, 1869, shall cease and determine, and all the provisions of the acts imposing discriminating foreign tonnage and import duties in the United States, are hereby revived, and shall henceforth be and remain in full force as relates to goods and merchandise imported into the United States, in French vessels from countries other than France, so long as any discriminating duties shall continue to be imposed by France upon goods and merchandise imported into France by vessels of the United States from countries other than the United States.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the City of Washington this 30th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1872, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-seventh. U. S. GRANT.

By the President:

HAMILTON FISH, Secretary of State.

UTAH AFFAIRS.

Return of the Hayden Expedition—Railroad Litigation—A Severe Snow-Storm.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Oct. 29.—The Hayden exploring party will go East to-morrow. Chief-Justice McKean has overruled the motion for non-suit in the case of Page vs. The Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the evidence for the defense is being heard. There was another heavy snow-storm last night, but the railroads are not retarded. The weather is now clear and cold.

Further Particulars Concerning the Accident on the Great Western Railway in Canada.

TORONTO, Canada, Oct. 30.—A number of the members of the Patti-Marie troupe were on the train which met with an accident at Beamsville, yesterday. Mr. Strakosch was severe injuries; his face is badly cut and bruised, and his right arm sprained. The other members of the company escaped. Mr. Strakosch arrived here last night. Laurent Pruys, of New-York, who was on his wedding trip, sustained a scalp wound, and his wife was bruised about the face. Thomas Kennedy, a clock manufacturer, of Connecticut, received a spinal injury.

A Raid of Indians in Texas.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 30.—The Republican publishes a brief correspondence this morning from Texas, under date of Oct. 17, in which it reports that the Indians had made a raid into Hood and Parker Counties, on the Brazos River, killing one woman and wounding several other persons. Part of the Indians still remained in Texas, and the citizens were organizing for the purpose of driving them out.

Launch of a New American Steam-Ship for the Philadelphia and Liverpool Line.

Letter of Sumner, Declining the Nomination for Governor of Massachusetts.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 30.—Charles Sumner, in a letter from Paris declining the coalition nomination for Governor of Massachusetts, says: "In acknowledging your communication I beg to repeat the declination, most sincerely desiring that no person should vote for me. Beyond this personal wish, which I trust will not be disregarded, is the consideration that, if chosen, I could not serve. At the same time I express my grateful sense of the trust reposed in me by the Conventions which united in this nomination. My acknowledgments are especially due to the Conventions representing Middlesex and Essex."

THE RING INDICTMENTS.

Arrest of Ingersoll and Farrington—The Case of William M. Tweed—Statement Concerning Gas Indictment.

James H. Ingersoll and John D. Farrington, Jr., were arrested yesterday, on indictments of forgery in the third degree, found by the Grand Jury of Oyer and Terminer last week. As in the case of the two Aldermen yesterday, Ingersoll and Farrington presented themselves at the Sheriff's office at an early hour, where a formal arrest was made, and with the Sheriff and their counsel they proceeded to the Court of Oyer and Terminer. Judge Brady fixed the amount of bail at $5,000 each. The counsel for Ingersoll protested against the amount of bail, and suggested to the Judge that $5,000 was too much, who in reply, after glancing a second time at the indictment, observed that "he certainly did not think so." The parties then repaired to the District-Attorney's office, where the bonds were made out, Mr. Joseph Shelder furnishing the bail in both cases.

The indictment upon which the warrant for the arrest of both men was issued sets forth that Ingersoll and Farrington, on the 26th of December, 1870, had in their possession a certain warrant for the payment of money, of which the subjoined is a copy:

The County Treasurer of New-York to the National Broadway Bank.

NEW-YORK, Dec. 26, 1870.

Pay to Heath & Smith, or order, fifteen thousand one hundred and thirty-eight dollars, for masons' work in the new Court-house from Oct. 14, 1869, to December, 1870.

RICHARD B. CONNOLLY, Comptroller.

A. OAKEY HALL, Mayor.

J. S. YOUNG, Clerk of Board of Supervisors.

The indictment then presents that Ingersoll and Farrington did feloniously forge and counterfeit the indorsement of Messrs. Heath & Smith upon the back of the above warrant, which offense by law is constituted forgery in the third degree.

These last two arrests complete the work of the Sheriff in the "Ring" business, no more bench warrants being in his hands, nor are any more expected.

The statement that the Grand Jury had presented an indictment against Mr. Thomas Coman has been proved incorrect. Such, however, was the rumor round the Sheriff's office, and it came from generally reliable sources.

The case of William M. Tweed was suddenly brought up in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday morning. Immediately before the opening of the Court, Tweed, accompanied by his counsel, Messrs. John Graham and Bartlett, entered the ante-room of the Court. Mr. Graham held a consultation with the District-Attorney, and learned from that functionary that Tweed would not be required that day. It was ultimately decided that Tweed's case would come up immediately upon the opening of the Hall trial, so that this cause célèbre may be looked for today, or, at the latest, to-morrow. It is understood that the first proceeding will be the hearing of an argument from Mr. Graham for the quashing of the last indictments against his client.

The Gas Question—The Citizens of Harlem Visit the Controller.

A committee composed of prominent citizens of Harlem, and representing a Tax-payers' Association of the Twelfth Ward, called upon Controller Green, at his office, yesterday, to protest against the payment of bills for gas supplied in their district, on account of its inferior quality and exorbitant prices. Mr. Ebenezer H. Brown, who spoke on behalf of the delegation, also called the attention of the Controller to the number of lamps in Harlem and vicinity used by private parties but furnished with gas at the expense of the City. The citizens should not be required to pay for the gas consumed in this way, and in Harlem alone there are hundreds of such lamps. The street's were so wretchedly lighted that an ordinary oil lamp would furnish more light; and instead of three feet of gas being burned per hour by each lamp, as claimed by the Gas Companies, no more than two feet were actually consumed, as the defective illumination clearly proved.

The Controller said in reply that the unpaid claims of the gas companies for last year found in his office amounted to nearly a million of dollars, and, of course, their examination required time and care. The result was satisfactory in accuracy and knowledge gained. The private lamps had been counted from the Battery to Harlem, and their exact number ascertained. The companies charged on the average $33 per lamp per year; but supplied the same amount of gas for private individuals at from $36 per year. It was generally believed that the prices charged to private individuals were high, and yet the City paid largely in excess of these high rates for gas for public use. He thought that the City, which is a larger consumer, should not be asked to pay more than any other person, who uses but little gas in his house. In business transactions, a large reduction would be made on the bills of a dealer who purchases great quantities of goods, and there was every reason why the City should pay less than the private citizen, instead of being asked to pay more.

Increase in Price of Coal—Heavy Sales Yesterday—The Quotations.

The regular monthly sale of Scranton coal took place, yesterday, at the Company's salesroom, No. 10 Exchange-place. Messrs. John H. Draper & Co. were the auctioneers. There was a large attendance, and, under spirited bidding, 75,000 tons were rapidly disposed of. Steam-boat and grate coal sold at a slight reduction upon last month's prices. Egg, stove and chestnut commanded an advance. Lump held the last month's rate. It first sold for $3 65, and the balance was knocked down at $3 67½. Steam-boat first sold at $4 12½, and declined to $3 62½. Grate rose from $3 90 to $3 92½, when the balance was knocked down. Egg all sold at $4 15. Sales of stove coal were made at $4 62½ and $4 70, and at intermediate prices. Chestnut sold first at $3 70½, rose to $3 85, after which it declined to $3 80.

| | Tons. | September. | October. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lump | 5,000 | $3 65 @ $3 67½ | $3 62½ @ $3 67½ |
| Steamboat | 17,000 | $4 12½ | $4 12½ @ $4 12½ |
| Grate | 17,500 | $3 82½ @ $3 90 | $3 62½ @ $3 92½ |
| Egg | 10,000 | $4 00 @ $4 10 | ..... $4 15 |
| Stove | 24,000 | $4 22½ @ $4 35 | $4 62½ @ $4 70 |

Mysterious Disappearance of an Emigrant.

There is considerable interest felt by the Castle Garden officials in the fate of one of the emigrants who arrived in this City recently on her way to the West. The facts of the case are as follows: Maria Weingarn and her daughter Matilda arrived in New-York on the 21st inst., from Stockholm, Sweden, on their way to Omaha. They bought through tickets, which were to be exchanged by a clerk in Castle Garden upon arrival, for others issued by the railroad companies to Omaha. By some mistake on the part of the clerk only one ticket was given in exchange for the two tickets, and the woman and her daughter left Castle Garden on the 24th inst. for Omaha, by the New-York Central Railroad. When the train arrived at Poughkeepsie, the conductor, being tendered only one ticket, refused to give both of the emigrants passage, and the daughter was obliged to leave the train. Her mother, however, continued on her journey, and, it is understood, has arrived at her destination in Omaha. Since the girl left the train nothing has been seen or heard of her, so far as is known by the Castle Garden officials, although they are making every exertion to discover her whereabouts. The matter has been referred to the Commissioner of Emigration, who now have it under investigation.

Seizure of Diamonds.

The purser of the steamer Egypt, which recently arrived in this port, had a small box containing a number of unset diamonds, consigned to his care by parties on the other side, which he was directed to deliver to the Adams Express Company, to be forwarded to their destination. The package did not appear on the steamer's manifest. He delivered the box to a wharfinger upon arrival, and the latter kept it in his pocket until a day or two before the steamer sailed, when he attempted to deposit it in a general-order store. O. M. Chenbery, Customs officer, being informed of the circumstances, deemed the diamonds legitimate objects of seizure, and acted accordingly. The diamonds, valued at $2,000, were yesterday taken to the seizure-room of the New-York Custom-house.

A Sad Accident in Brooklyn.

On Tuesday afternoon, Florence, a three-year-old daughter of Dr. Corey, residing at No. 241 Carlton-avenue, fell from the third-story window of her house, to the floor below. The body was taken up almost lifeless, and Mr. Cushing, the child's grandfather, started off at once after a physician. On returning he was informed Florence was dead. Upon hearing this announcement, Mr. Cushing fell to the floor and expired almost instantly. Coroner Jones held an inquest yesterday on both of the bodies, and a verdict was rendered in accordance with the above facts.

THE DISEASED HORSES.

A Satisfactory Improvement Among the City Animals.

Increased Activity in all Branches of Trade.

The Street-Railroads Still Putting Off Their Cars—The Number of Dead Horses—The Disease in the Vicinity.

A very general improvement in the condition of the horses affected by the epidemic was noticeable yesterday, and there can be no doubt that the crisis has passed, and with ordinary care, recovery will be the result in a vast majority of cases. The streets of the City wore a more lively and business-like aspect than on any of the preceding four days. The number of vehicles employed in trade had considerably increased, and the coaches and stages were reinforced to a marked extent. The street-cars alone showed no sign of improvement, except toward evening, when, for a short time, the west side lines doubled their running force. An increased activity was noticeable along the docks and in the lower business thoroughfares, West, South, and Church streets being alive with traffic on a scale nearly double that of Tuesday. In these localities teams of oxen were frequently to be seen, and those employing them declare their new aids to be but little less serviceable than the horses. In the up-town localities a change was also noticeable, many of the ice, coal, and ash-carts, which had partly disappeared from the streets, having resumed their rounds. The railroads and livery-stables brought out their horses in large numbers for exercise, their improved condition being very satisfactory to the anxious superintendents and owners. The livery-stables, or a majority of them, resumed business to some extent, carriages being furnished in limited numbers for weddings, funerals, and "emergencies," at satisfactory prices. As usual, the scramble for places on the street-cars was immense in the afternoon, and the vehicles were loaded to their utmost capacity. The additional stages did not appear to obviate the crush in any degree, and a harmon con sined demanding fabulous rates.

The owners of horses affected now take a much more hopeful view of the prospects, and say that while a large number of animals will undoubtedly die, the proportion will not be by any means so great as at first, or as usual with epidemics. The only fear lies in too early a return to work, as the disease leaves the animal in a very feeble condition, and it is the opinion of many competent authorities that it is actually less dangerous to work the horses while suffering from the affection than immediately after the disappearance of the epidemic. Business men, as a rule, are of the opinion that with oxen and hand carts in sufficiency there would be no need to bring out the horses before they have fully recovered both health and strength.

But while the prospects are unquestionably more favorable now than at any previous time since the appearance of the epidemic, it must not be supposed that the trouble is by any means over, or that there is no likelihood of further mortality among the horses affected. For a considerable number of the latter there is no hope of recovery, and it is extremely probable that the fatal results in such cases will not be less during the rest of the week than in the past few days. The improvement reported is, of course, not without exception, and applies only to the majority of cases. In local travel, no additional facilities can be expected for some days to come, as the car companies yet running their cars have resolved to work as little as possible, while those which have withdrawn will not, as a rule, resume until their horses have recovered, which cannot be expected for some days to come.

THE CAR-LINES.

Yesterday, one-fourth of the usual number of cars ran on the Third-avenue line. The intention of the Company was to have continued to run half the cars until this week, and somewhat abated. Mr. Bergh interfered with this arrangement on the ground that it would necessitate the working of horses so much affected by the disease as to finish them for the road. All the cars running yesterday had double teams, in accordance with an arrangement entered into with Mr. Bergh. No change in the number of cars to be run will be made on the road during the coming week, unless an improvement of a marked character takes place among the horses. The Company are willing and anxious to put on a good many more cars, but the President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is inexorable. Two deaths from the disease occurred in the stables yesterday. The horses generally are feeding better and coughing less.

At the Second-avenue stables a slight improvement is visible among the horses, although the work of keeping them in condition is made very difficult by reason of the heavy loading on the cars. The Company continued yesterday to run fifty trips short. The horses are improving. No deaths have occurred at this stable since the breaking out of the epidemic. The same number of cars will be on the road today if no change for the worse takes place among the horses. Mr. Bergh went through the Company's stables on Tuesday evening, but expressed no opinion as to the condition of the horses. He has not up to the present interfered with any of the Company's arrangements.

At the Fourth-avenue car stables the horses are very much better. Yesterday the Company, as on the other days of the week, ran twenty; today the number will be increased to twelve. Only one death has occurred at this stable since the first coming of the disease.

The Sixth-avenue road showed a decided improvement yesterday, half the usual number of cars being run on both the Central and Central lines, or forty altogether. No further deaths have occurred here, and the condition of the horses in hospital had very slightly improved.

The Broadway and Seventh-avenue line continued the same as on Tuesday, with the exception of a slight lessening in the number of cars run. In the afternoon eleven of the Broome-street cars were run out, and made two trips each. The hospital here contains five desperate cases.

On Eighth-avenue half the usual number of cars were run on both the Canal and Vesey-street lines. The condition of the horses had improved.

Ninth-avenue will resume today with ten, or half the full complement of cars. The horses here are reported better.

The Belt line has not yet resumed the road, and will not be so before Saturday at least. A horse died here yesterday, making the second fatal case.

The Grand and Forty-second-street line continues to run on half time. The horses are reported better.

Mr. Bergh yesterday notified the Bleecker-street and Fulton Ferry Railroad Company that their horses were in a bad condition, and that they must be withdrawn. Mr. Conover, the Superintendent, was absent at the time the notice was sent, and action by Mr. Bergh was suspended until today. If the superintendent fails to answer Mr. Bergh's letter, the latter will stop travel on the line.

THE STAGE LINES.

The Fourth-avenue Stage Company increased their number of stages to forty yesterday, and today will probably make a further addition. A much greater increase is warranted, in the opinion of the foreman of the stable, by the very much improved condition of the live stock. With one or two exceptions, the horses are past all danger. One death occurred last night. At the Madison and Fourth-avenue Stage Company's stables the news is cheering. The horses are feeding better and improving. The Company had 200 on the road yesterday forty-nine stages, or three more than the day before. If the horses continue to improve, a few more stages will be placed on the road today. Four deaths have occurred at this stable since the epidemic arrived.

The Fifth-avenue and Broadway Stage Company had forty stages on the road yesterday, being an increase of two from the day before. Today the number will probably be increased. In this stable there are one or two bad cases, but the horses generally are improving.

The Broadway and Fourteenth-street Stage Company were obliged to withdraw six stages from the line yesterday. On Tuesday Mr. Bergh interfered somewhat with their running of stages. The horses generally are improving, but are yet very weak. No change in the number of stages can will be made today.

The Twenty-third-street line yesterday added twelve stages to the number—thirty—already on the road, making forty-two running of the sixty-two usually employed.

IMPROVEMENT IN TRADE PROSPECTS.

The consternation that had existed on Monday among the mercantile community, in consequence of the difficulty of obtaining transportation, was greatly abated yesterday, as the majority of the carmen appeared willing to work, although in many cases at advanced rates. Most of the horses had their heads and throats bound up, but as the animals exhibited spirit for work, their owners did not feel willing to let them remain in the stables. The natural consequence was that merchants who had goods to remove to ships, &c., and those who desired to get freight from the piers, found, yesterday, fair means for securing transportation, while the carmen generally were engaged to deliver and receive merchandise at private houses. In many instances, where the horses were dead, or in a condition which rendered it impossible to work them, the owners of horses demanded as much as $10 for a single cart-load of all the hands from the wagons, and employed them to convey the boxes to the purchasers, a distance of only a few blocks, rather than work the horses. The men seemed to enjoy the fun.

The appearance of all the ocean-boat and ship piers yesterday was far better than on any preceding day this week. The immense quantity of all kinds of freight that had accumulated before, have had disappeared, and even the huge piles of cotton had greatly diminished, notwithstanding the fact that other steamers had arrived in the meantime. As the Charleston, Savannah, New-Orleans, Boston, and Troy steam-boat piers, however, had received their wonted appearance, and teams were constantly arriving with thousands of bales of cotton, and the heavier kind of merchandise, the merchants had to pay advanced rates, but not near the amounts charged on Monday and Tuesday. At the railroad and foreign steam-ship piers along the North River business had again become brisk, and one of the superintendents remarked that he was surprised that anyone would suppose that there was any horse disease in the City.

In the markets the merit of the wholesale dealers has greatly revived. The early morning trade had resumed its wonted aspect, and the stagnation of the preceding days had almost been forgotten, except when a high demand was made for carting. Thus, the dealers believed, would soon regulate itself, as carmen were again looking for employment instead of demanding extravagant sums. The grocers' and butchers' wagons had again made their usual appearance in the markets, and the trade incident thereon had therefore increased. The fish-dealers no longer feared for their stock, but all agreed that it would teach them the value of horseflesh.

At the ferries the gate-men said the travel of teams had greatly increased, but had not resumed its regular proportions, doubtless owing to the fact that more horses were engaged in carting about the City, without seeking for jobs across the river. Coal-teams were also again at work, so that in a few days the prices of delivered coal will be about the same as before the appearance of the disease.

THE FREIGHT DEPOTS.

The freight depots of the various railroads are crowded with bales, boxes, casks, and packages of every description, the consignees having no means of removing them. At the Hudson River Depot, in Hudson-street, and the depot of the Harlem Road, in Centre-street, packages of country produce are piled up to immense quantities, and the freight agents are of opinion that a few days more of such delay would necessitate a suspension of the heavier freightage of the companies.

The Mortality Among the Horses.

Ten horses at the Third-avenue Railroad stables, one at the Second-avenue Railroad stables, one at the railroad stables No. 468 Third-avenue, at No. 424 West Thirteenth-street, No. 10 Ninth-avenue, No. 21 Gansevoort-street, No. 18 Bank-street, foot of West Twelfth-street, No. 25 Bethune-street, No. 818 Washington-street, at a stable on the Fort Washington Depot road, south side of One Hundred and Twenty-fourth-street, near Eighth-avenue, north-west corner of One Hundred and Eighty-second-street and Kingsbridge road, No. 46 East Fourth-street, No. 341 Sixth-street, No. 212 Sixth-street, No. 518 East Twelfth-street, No. 526 East Eleventh-street, No. 502 First-avenue, No. 209 Second-avenue, No. 239 Second-avenue, No. 13 Harrison-street, No. 421 West Seventeenth-street, No. 561 West Twenty-third-street, corner of Twenty-second-street and Eleventh-avenue; Eleventh-avenue, between Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets; No. 232 West Twenty-first-street, No. 241 West Twenty-eighth-street, No. 241 West Thirty-seventh-street, No. 507 West Thirty-seventh-street, No. 510 West Forty-fourth-street, No. 556 Seventh-avenue, No. 410 West Thirty-eighth-street, No. 459 West Thirty-first-street, No. 139 West Eighteenth-street, No. 20 East Seventeenth-street, No. 20 Cherry-street, No. 107 Cherry-street, No. 294 Delancey-street, No. 24 Oak-street, No. 234 William-street, No. 40 Oliver-street, No. 220 Elizabeth-street, No. 327 East Thirty-eighth-street, No. 342 East Twenty-eighth-street, No. 153 East Thirty-fifth-street, No. 221 East Thirty-ninth-street, No. 233 East Twenty-second-street, No. 238 East Eighteenth-street, One Hundredth-street and Madison-avenue, Nos. 159, 96 and 26 Thompson street; One Hundredth-street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues; No. 119 East Eleventh-street, No. 61 West Twelfth-street, No. 340 Third-street, No. 61 East Eleventh-street, No. 90 Sheriff-street, No. 244 Third-street, No. 71 Pike-slip, No. 318 Cherry-street, No. 60 East Broadway, No. 420 Water-street, No. 779 Third-avenue, No. 419 East Forty-fifth-street, Fifteenth-street and Fourth-avenue, Fourth-avenue, between Forty-ninth and Forty-fifth streets, Forty-fourth-street and East River, No. 158 Charles-street, No. 786 Washington-street, No. 12 Minetta-street, No. 873 Washington-street, No. 502 Washington-street, Sixteenth-street and Avenue D, No. 10 East Twenty-fifth-street, No. 206 East Twenty-fourth-street, No. 209 East Twenty-third-street, No. 232 East Twenty-second-street, No. 144 East Twenty-fourth-street, No. 209 East Twenty-third-street, and No. 168 Fourth-avenue.

Notwithstanding the reported improvement among the horses in Brooklyn yesterday, it is difficult to determine exactly what is the true state of the epidemic. With a few exceptions truckmen, particularly those whose animals stand quiet during a great portion of the day awaiting jobs, give an encouraging statement. They say the improvement in the condition of their animals is very decided. The agent at Dodd's Express office reported their horses not improving. The business of the office is almost totally suspended. No calls have been received for several days, and the Company's horses are not brought out of the stables, except one or two occasionally for a couple of hours of moderate work, under the belief that a little exercise is beneficial. Fifteen horses were reported at the Police Central Office yesterday as having died in different parts of the city. A great many cows, pigs and dogs have also been reported within the past two days as having died from a disease resembling in all its symptoms that which afflicts the horses. Several instances have occurred in which men have taken the carcasses of diseased horses have themselves become affected, and this fact leads some of the doctors to believe that the distemper may be imparted to other animals, and even to men. Three persons in one family in East New-York are suffering with the complaint, which their physicians do not hesitate to say they contracted from their distempered horses.

The railroad lines as yet exhibit no practical results of any improvement. A conductor on one of the Greenpoint cars stated that the horses of that Company were as bad as they had been at any time, and that not one was fit to be out of the stables. A total suspension of business on all the car lines for a few days is talked of, in order to give the animals the rest which is essential to their speedy recovery. In view of the disabled condition of the horses of the street-cleaning contractors, the Board of City Works request persons not to place their ash-barrels on the sidewalks, as their contents cannot be removed.

The Disease Increasing in New-Jersey.

The epidemic is making terrible strides in New-Jersey. There were seven deaths yesterday in Jersey City. Almost the entire business of the city is utterly stagnated, and such as is still carried on may soon cease.

The alarm occasioned by this state of facts is increased ten-fold by the known fact that nearly all of the horses belonging to the Fire Department are incapable of performing duty. The apprehensions that are necessarily entertained by the citizens, that a great conflagration would destroy the City, are very great, as in the event of a fire it would be found impossible to use the steamers. An additional cause for alarm is, that the horses that have died of the disease are allowed to remain where they fell, thereby increasing the spread of the infection.

The railway lines are great sufferers by the disease. The greater number of the horses used on the roads are totally incapable of duty, and the Adams Express Company have not been able to attend to their business for two days for the same general reason. No one is capable of judging from the results where the end may be.

The Epidemic in Long Island.

In Long Island City there is hardly a well horse. Every one in the livery stables is sick, and nearly all those belonging to the large manufacturing companies. The ice-carts and bakers' wagons have stopped running. The Astoria and Hunter's Point Railroad Company are running half the number of cars. In Flushing and Jamaica the same state of affairs exists. Few, if any, horses have yet been cured. Business is at a stand still, and a feeling of general alarm begins to prevail over the entire country.

The Distemper in Westchester.

The horse distemper continues to spread in Westchester County. The scarcity of horses and vehicles in the streets of villages is very perceptible. The trips of the horse-cars on the Harlem Bridge and Fordham Railroad have been almost entirely suspended.

The Disease at Ilion Shows Itself in Other Places.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Oct. 30.—Although the weather is pleasant, there is no improvement in the horse epidemic. Over two-thirds of the canal horses are affected with the disease, and considerable difficulty is experienced in moving the boats.

NYACK, N. Y., Oct. 30.—The horse disease has broken out here. There are numerous sick horses in the public and several in private stables. Reports from the vicinity show its prevalence throughout this neighborhood. There are several of cases in Piermont.

BOSTON, Oct. 30.—More horses appear on the streets today than for several days past, but far from enough to meet the demands of trade and travel. The disease is evidently subsiding in the vicinity.

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 30.—The horse malady prevails here to some extent, but so far has appeared only in a mild form.

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 30.—The horse disease is reaching alarming proportions in this city and vicinity. A fatal case occurred here today. Twenty-four out of twenty-six horses in one stable are sick, and hundreds of persons are affected. At Passaic Village, near here, there have been 100 cases, but the malady is breaking up there. At Hackensack, Bergen County, nearly every horse is prostrated. The disease has broken out at Rhinebeck, north of Paterson, at Bloomingdale and Wanaque, in the county.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Oct. 30.—The horse disease is spreading rapidly here. Twenty or thirty canal boats are laid up, and nearly every boat has lost one or two horses. Several hundred horses in the city are affected, and it is thought that in a day or two nearly all will be sick. It is spreading in the country also.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 30.—The horse disease is rapidly abating here and teams are quite plenty in the streets; the cars are running, and light again on the streets.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Oct. 30.—No new cases of horse disease have been announced today. The disease has apparently assumed a milder type, and many of those attacked are already recovering. So far no fatal cases have occurred. Passenger-cars are running as usual, except on one line, which has withdrawn seven cars, on account of thirty horses being in the hospital.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 30.—All the horses were withdrawn this noon from the street railways, nearly all of them becoming weak and spiritless. Some of the stables report that the horses are improving this morning.

JERSEY RAILWAY TROUBLES.

The Lease of the New-Jersey Railways to the Pennsylvania Company—Proceedings to Set Aside the Lease.

Proceedings will be commenced today in the Court of Chancery of New-Jersey to have the lease of the New-Jersey railroads to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company set aside, for non-compliance with law in respect of filing the agreement. The law which makes such a proceeding necessary, is an old one, passed several years ago by the Legislature, and never applied to force a dissolution of agreements between railroad companies until recently. The first case in which it came up was that of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company against the New-Jersey Central, and it was very generally believed, when this law came to light, that its requirements had not been met. The National Railway Company in its answer to the complaint filed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in its injunction suit against the former, made the allegation that the Pennsylvania Company, by neglecting this provision of the law, had no

General Summary of the Political Contests of Next Week.

Leading Candidates of Both Parties—Past Votes of the States and their New Representation in the Electoral College.

Besides the election of President and Vice-President, next week, elections will be held in many States, as specified below, for State officers, members of Congress, Legislatures, &c. Presidential Electors will be chosen in Louisiana, by special act of Congress, on Monday, Nov. 4, the State election there regularly coming on that day, and the trouble and expense of holding two elections so near together being thus avoided. In Texas, the election will begin on Tuesday, and continue four days. In the other States, the elections will be held and completed on Tuesday, Nov. 5. The names of the leading candidates of both parties in the several States, and the vote cast in recent years, are given below:

There is a temperance ticket for State officers in the field in this State. Three amendments to the State Constitution are to be voted upon in Michigan. One relates to the old "railroad aid bonds," issued by towns, cities, and counties, previous to May 31, 1870, payment upon which was stopped by a decision of the Supreme Court declaring the law under which they were issued unconstitutional. The amendment proposes merely to permit the towns, &c., to pay such bonds if they choose so to do, and it provides that the State shall never be taxed to pay them. The second amendment increases the salaries of Circuit Judges to $3,500, and the third provides that the number of such Judges shall be reduced from eighteen to fifteen in 1876, when the increased salary is to be paid. The vote of Michigan, in recent years, has been:

Four amendments to the State Constitution are to be voted on in Minnesota. The first authorizes an increase of the State debt to finish and equip the State charitable institutions. The second exempts stockholders in manufacturing corporations from personal liability, an exception not made in behalf of stockholders in railroad or other companies. The third forbids the Legislature to authorize towns to aid railroads in an excess of ten per cent of their valuation. The fourth relates to the old railroad aid bonds, and to the lands given by Congress to the State for internal improvements, providing that these lands shall be sold, and the proceeds be invested in United States bonds or Minnesota State bonds issued since 1860, to constitute an internal improvement land fund. The vote of Minnesota in recent years has been:

A Cure for Hydrophobia.

A correspondent of the London Times writes to that journal that there exists in the heart of the Ardennes an obscure and antiquated little village, nestling round a fine old abbey church, dedicated to St. Hubert, whither resort annually the average number of 140 persons from Germany, Tyrol, Switzerland, Belgium, &c., to participate in what they are firmly convinced is an infallible cure for hydrophobia. This belief—justified, our correspondent says, by the result—has existed for eleven centuries, during which time, it is asserted, the remedy has never been known to fail, unless the regulations enjoined have been willfully violated. The place is a few miles off the railroad, and sufficiently picturesque to form an attraction to the pedestrian tourist and artist. Our informant remained there a couple of days, during which he obtained every detail connected with its local characteristic, and, without attempting in any way to explain the circumstance, or to urge it on the belief of any one, he asserts that he was not able to meet with any one, however skeptical, who could be got to deny the efficacy of the remedy. He observes, with reference to the remarks of a Scotch correspondent in the Times as to secret remedies known to natives in India for poisonous bites, that he need not go so far to search for them. There is still in the possession of his family a letter addressed from his grandfather to his relatives in England, dated Paris, where he was residing at the time the First Consul made all the English into hostages. It states that having been bitten by a dog declared to be mad, and consequently destroyed, he was carried to the Hôtel-Dieu, where, after the application of a certain powder, the ingredients of which were known only to the medical staff there, he was completely cured. He offered a large sum to obtain the recipe, but was told it had been discovered by a monk, and given to that hospital on condition that it should never be revealed. His grandfather was a stanch Protestant, and there was neither superstition nor credulity to account for the statement or the cure.

Enormous Robberies by a French Architect.

The Propagateur de Lille gives some details of two robberies committed under singular circumstances, the perpetrator of them being a man named Lemay, an architect and business agent in that town. In 1870, at the outbreak of the war, he sent his wife to the house of a friend of his, named Baude, a rich landholder at Autrive, and afterward to that of a widow, Mme. Mollet-Baude, an equally wealthy proprietor at Escaudœuvre, the two localities being situated near Courtray. On July 21, 1871, Lemay conducted to a representation at the American Circus, Place de la République, his wife, accompanied by Mme. Mollet. He had scarcely arrived when he quitted the representation under pretext of indisposition, took the train for Roubaix, where he had engaged a carriage, got into it, drove to Escaudœuvre, penetrated into the house of Mme. Mollet, and carried off 23,500 francs' worth of railway securities and jewels. The next day, at 8½ o'clock, he was at Lille, in his own house, and behaved to Mme. Mollet as if nothing had happened. In the course of the morning that lady received a telegram informing her that she had been the victim of a robbery. She begged the assistance of Lemay to trace the thief. The latter placed himself at her disposal, and remained at Escaudœuvre six weeks, of course without discovering the author of the theft. Lemay then decided on the means of committing another. In fact, he made a present of his own watchdog to M. Baude, assuring him that a mouse could not enter his dwelling without Médor barking. That gentleman was completely reassured; but in the night of Oct. 2, 1871, he was himself the victim of a robbery of 40,000 francs in securities, gold, and silver. It so happened that Lemay had rebuilt the house of M. Baude, so that he knew all the passages in it. Moreover, the dog had not barked, so that there were two indications, and the gentleman who had been despoiled arrived at the supposition that the thief might very well be Lemay himself. He therefore applied to the Police, and the hero of the tale was arrested by the Belgian authorities, and, after active researches, the property stolen from M. Baude and Mme. Mollet was recovered in two hiding-places in Lemay's house. Lemay is now awaiting his trial.

THE PRESIDENCY.

Composition of the Electoral College—The Straight-Out Democratic Influence—Names of Candidates—Latest Votes in the Several States of the Union.

The Electoral College to be chosen on Tuesday next will be composed of 366 members, apportioned among the several States as given in the table presented below. Separate nominations for these positions have, of course, been made by the supporters of Grant and Wilson and Greeley and Brown in all the States. In addition, the friends of O'Conor and Adams, nominees of the Jeffersonian Democracy, have made nominations for electors in New-York, California, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, New-Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and perhaps other States. We have also noticed announcements of nominations of electors by the temperance people in Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Michigan. The candidates to be supported for the Presidency and Vice-Presidency are:

| | President. | Vice-President. |
| Republican | Ulysses S. Grant. | Henry Wilson. |
| Democratic | Horace Greeley. | B. Gratz Brown. |
| Straight Dem. | Charles O'Conor. | John Quincy Adams. |
| Temperance | James Black. | John Russell. |

THE VOTE OF THE STATES.

In the following table we present a statement of the vote of each State in the Electoral College, and the vote of the several States at the latest general election held. The returns from Georgia, Nebraska, South Carolina, and West Virginia are incomplete, and the estimated majorities only are given. In West Virginia the last election was an unsatisfactory test, there being two Democratic candidates for Governor only in the field, and the Republicans generally casting their votes for Hon. John J. Jacob, the present incumbent, who ran as an independent candidate against the regular nominee of his party, and was elected.

THE PAPACY.

Scenes in Rome on the Death of a Pope—How Gregory XVI. Passed Away—The Approaching Pontifical Election.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

ROME, Wednesday, Oct. 2, 1872.

The excitement attendant upon the celebration of the anniversary of the emancipation of Italy not scarcely passed away, when an apparently trivial occurrence caused all the quidnuncs of the Eternal City once more to shake their wise heads, and to run in a great flurry from the Pincian to the Aventine, and from the palace of Antonelli to the Embassy of France. Marvelous rumors spread from the Vatican across the bridge into the densely-populated quarters of the city, making them swarm his troubled see-saws, and cautious whispers exchanged at the Piazza de Colonna ended in loud exclamations at the Porta del Popolo. What had really happened was only this: Tuesday morning being fine, and promising a warm day, the Pope expressed a wish to take a short walk in the fine garden behind the Vatican; the usual attendants were at once notified, but when they sallied forth they noticed that the Holy Father was a little nervous, his hand, holding the staff on which he is obliged to lean nowadays, trembling visibly, and his eyes, which have only changed of late, searching with anxious eagerness all the avenues that opened before him. Nor was it less unusual to see Pius IX. venture forth upon a walk (he had not left the rooms and corridors of the Vatican for months) without being accompanied by the Cardinal Secretary, the faithful and all-powerful Antonelli. But still greater was the astonishment of all who surrounded him, when of a sudden, at a turn in the garden, a noble-looking prelate appeared in sight, who no sooner beheld the Holy Father, than he saluted him, according to the strict ceremonial of former days, but with well-feigned alarm of astonishment. A few sentences, uttered with intentional emphasis, spoke of the accidental meeting, the happy chance which had thus brought the Pope and the clerical representative of France, Cardinal Bonnechose, face to face. The rumor spread with that rapidity which characterizes Roman caterwaul for news, and ere many minutes had passed, eager priests and anxious laymen were seen hanging around all the entrances and gateways, to catch a glimpse of the French prelate, who had not been seen at the Pope's Court for many a month. And when it gradually became known that the interview had lasted for more than an hour, and that at the leave-taking Pius IX. had spoken most affectionately of the people of France, all Rome was astir, and dispatches were sent off to all parts of the world.

Nor was it mere idle curiosity which thus stirred up the Eternal City, but a deep and solemn feeling that found a ready echo at every court of Europe, in every nation on earth. It is well known at Rome that the days of poor Pius IX. are numbered, and every minister has long since begun to send daily bulletins to his master at home. The bent shoulders, the drooping head, the feeble gait, and above all the fading memory of the good old man, speak but too eloquently of the approach of the day on which he is to be freed of his burden. Nor does he flatter himself—as he used to do till quite recently—any longer with visions of long years of life, of great deeds yet to be done, and of thorough changes to be accomplished. His brother's recent death has made a deep impression upon his mind, and the spirit that once held up and strengthened the decaying frame, is no longer there. He knows his end is coming, and he shares with all his faithful ones the great anxiety to know who is to be his successor on the throne of St. Peter. It is even said that the dread of the last hour is weighing heavily on his mind.

He will not be blamed for this terror by those who know the nature of the last scene which is enacted at the Vatican when a Pope leaves this world. As soon as all hope is given up by the attending physicians—and good care is taken to ascertain the precise moment—all ties of respect or affection are broken in an instant, and the lowest passions are unchained without shame or reserve. Prelates and priests rush away to gather around their patrons, and to worship the rising sun. Officers of the Noble Guard, State officials of every rank, and all the employes of the palace collect in haste their property to secure it against new comers, and carry away many a costly souvenir from the deserted apartments. The very servants, from the Pope's "own man" to the scullion in the kitchen, join the general sauve qui peut, but only after having loaded themselves with all the money, jewels or other valuable things on which they can lay hands. Such was the case in 1846, when Gregory XVI. was abandoned by all his friends and followers. A poor under gardener, who had often received a kind word or a modest gift from the Pope when walking in his garden, heard of his illness, and felt prompted in his heart to see him once more in life. He found the outer door of the palace open; not a person in the halls, on the stairs, in the passages. He knocked at a door, and, as no one answered, opened it; the room was empty; he ventured into a second and third; not a soul was to be seen. At last he enters a dimly-lighted, magnificent apartment, and to his amazement, sees there a bed, on which a huge pile of pillows and bolsters is raised on one end, while the Pope himself lies on one side of it, his head hanging down and looking deep purple. The poor gardener rushes up to his benefactor; with tender, trembling hands he places him on his bed, and then sinks reverently on his knees, asking the Holy Father's blessing. As he receives no answer, he starts up in terror, touches the body and finds it cold! Once more he kneels down, saying a De Profundis for the deceased, and is thus found by a servant, who enters with a pile of garments and gowns on his arm, and threatens him with due punishment if ever a word escapes him as to what he has seen.

Nor even when death has thus taken pity on the abandoned sufferer, is rest or ease granted the poor body. The Cardinal Chamberlain, having been officially informed of the death of the Pope, appears with other prelates at the bedside and calls the deceased three times by name; receiving no answer, he takes from a silver salver, offered him by a high official, a silver hammer with ivory handle, and with this instrument knocks three times against the forehead of the deceased. Only then is the Pope officially dead; the Senate of Rome takes formal possession of the palace, the fisher's ring is solemnly broken and the bell set ringing, which is only heard at the death of the Pope, and—the beginning of carnival!

Then begins that most exciting of all scenes which Christendom knows upon earth—the conclave of the Cardinals for the purpose of electing a new Pope. What fearful passions, what jesuitic intrigues, what cunning devices, those narrow cells have witnessed, in which the electors are held prisoners till the choice has been accomplished! There are the so-called Crown Cardinals, who belong, by race or by family connection, to one of the reigning houses of Europe, and naturally favor the election of one of their own race, or at least of a man pledged to the interests of their country. Among these the German Empire will, after a long interval, appear once more as the approaching conclave, and, like Brennus, throw the victorious sword into the scales. Opposed to these are the Zelanti, who represent the Italian elements desirous of having a native on the Papal throne, who will take good care of friends and followers, and faithfully adhere to the traditions of former Popes.

The approaching election will, no doubt, be one of the most exciting in the annals of the Church. Although the Pope is no longer a secular Prince, he has, in the estimation of many sound thinkers and experienced statesmen, the chance of becoming all the more powerful in his capacity as a purely spiritual monarch of the kingdom of souls. He will no longer be hampered by temporal considerations, his dominions will not be open, as heretofore, to strict criticism and loud condemnation on the score of feebleness or partiality; even his finances will be bettered, and his position infinitely higher and safer than it was ever before. But the interest of the Ecclesiastical Powers lies mainly in having a Pope to deal with in the delicate questions of State and Church, who shall be liberal and enlightened. Germany, and perhaps France, will do all in their power to influence the election in this spirit; Italy and Spain, perhaps, also, some foreign countries, will as eagerly press the choice of a man pledged to continue the policy of Pius IX. While the Emperor of Germany will try to intimidate the Conclave, France will, no doubt, again have a cunning diplomat on hand who may rival his predecessor, and, like him, receive from the witty Roman people the title of "Knight of the Holy Ghost," in sly allusion to the form which declares the Conclave to be under the direct control of the Holy Spirit. The liberal powers of Europe will certainly see to it that the tiara be not placed upon the head of a man like Leo XII., (1823,) who built another wall around the Ghetto, the prison of the Jews, deposed a Roman Magistrate because he had permitted vaccination, and canonized a Spanish monk whose special proof of sanctity consisted in the frequent miracle of stripping half-roasted birds from the spit and ordering them to fly away alive.

Hence it is that all Rome is busy building castles in the air; there is not a man from the highest Monsignore to the humblest menial servant, who has not his favorite candidate for the throne, from whom he hopes preferment or alms. Patriotic Italians again are on the side of those who wish for a truly enlightened head of the Church, energetic enough to fight the great battle of the Church against the State, and yet wise enough not to risk an utter downfall of Papacy. All their speculations, however, may come to naught yet by one of two probabilities. Either a man may be chosen, like Pius IX. himself, whom even the bitter Romans only called the Good, of whom a satirical Cardinal unceremoniously said that in his family even the cats were Liberals, and who yet was forced to break every promise and abandon every purpose he had formed when he was chosen. Or the Pope and his advisers may avail themselves of the last resort left in such cases—a secret council may be called together by Pius IX. and a successor may be chosen by them in anticipation of his death. The measure is warranted by dogma and precedent alike, and can only miscarry by the determination of foreign Powers not to acknowledge the choice thus made, because the ancient right of exclusion, which belongs to them, has not been admitted. Even as these lines are written, the rumor is heard in many a palace that such a meeting has taken place, and that Cardinal Panebianco has been chosen.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The Pope has added to the list of Catholic saints the late Queen Maria Christina of Naples, Nicholas Pick, the French priest Jean d'Arc, and Pope Eugenius III.

The Independance Belge announces that the tavern-keepers of Brussels have been vanquished by the consumers. Most of the establishments, in which the price of beer had been raised from twelve centimes to fourteen centimes the glass, have now been forced to abandon the augmentation in question in consequence of the former customers remaining away.

The London Daily Telegraph publishes a telegram from Brussels, stating that a man has surrendered himself to the Magistrates of that city, who affirms that he was an accomplice of Trompmann in the murder of the Kinck family. He also declares that he was an officer under the Commune, and had taken part in the shooting of the hostages, among whom were the Archbishop of Paris and the President Bonjean. A medical examination has resulted in the opinion that the person is insane.

The London Echo, of Oct. 16, says: "A and remnant of the siege of Paris was discovered in the Seine yesterday. Some burgeos were being towed along at Bercy, when an unshapely mass came to the surface of the river. It was immediately fished on board by two men, and found to be the decomposed remains of a human body, dressed in a dirty costume. The dress was riddled in several places, and, on being undone, a tin box dropped out, which was discovered to contain dispatches from the Delegation at Tours to the Government at Paris. Another paper in the same box gave the name of the bearer, which was none other than Capt. Alfred Lecrand, of the Army of the Loire. The unfortunate deceased was a native of Choisy-le-Roi, and, owing to his intimate knowledge of the river in that part of the Prussian investment, had undertaken to get into the besieged capital. He is supposed, by the aid of his diving accoutrements, to have walked along the bed of the river for some distance, but through miscalculation came to the surface too soon and was shot by the Prussian outposts."

The London papers record the death of Mr. Albany Fonblanque, who for many years occupied a prominent position on the newspaper Press. His father was an equally lawyer and Queen's Counsel, and he was intended for the same profession, and placed in the office of Mr. Christy, the well-known special pleader. Circumstances, however, turned his attention to literature, and he became a contributor to the Morning Chronicle, under the successive editorships of Perry and Black. He afterward joined the staff of the Examiner weekly newspaper of which he eventually became the editor and proprietor. In that position he wrote a series of political articles, from the Radical point of view, the best of which were afterward collected by himself and reprinted in a permanent form under the title of England Under Seven Administrations. Soon after the Whigs came into power, in 1846, Lord John Russell conferred upon him the office of head of the Statistical Department in the Board of Trade, which he held to the death of Mr. Porter. From that time Mr. Fonblanque withdrew in great measure from his connection with the newspaper Press, and from literary pursuits in general, confining himself to the duties of his department. He died in the seventy-fifth year of his age.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "An enterprising member of the French clergy, impelled, no doubt, by the success which has attended the sale of Benedictine, Trappistine, Charrreuse, and other monastical liquors, has availed himself of the publicity which recent proceedings have given to the grotto at Lourdes to exercise a new spirit which, taken internally, will be as beneficial to the patient as the waters of the grotto when applied externally. In a prospectus headed 'A Notre Dame de Lourdes,' this liqueur, which is to be named 'L'Immortelle,' is announced to be made from the water of the miraculous fountain at Lourdes, with an admixture of plants and fruits from the splendid valleys of Luchon, Eaux-Bonnes, Chautelets, &c. It possesses, in addition to an exquisite perfume, qualities which render it a very valuable hygienic. Taken before a meal, it gives an appetite, but, instead of having a brutalizing and lethal effect like absinthe, it opens up the channels of the soul. Taken after food, it perfumes the mouth, accelerates the digestion, and creates a feeling of comfort greater than can be obtained from the best cognac or the most delicious Chartreuse. The most stubborn palate, the most rumed of stomachs, cannot but derive immediate benefit from this incomparable liqueur."

The Channel Passage.

Mr. Henry Bessemer has sent the following letter to the London Times:

"This subject has lately undergone a most thorough and searching investigation, and one of England's most able naval architects, Mr. E. J. Reed, is at this moment busily engaged settling the details of a pair of vessels of the most improved construction, especially adapted and intended for the Channel service. These plans are nearly ready for the builder, and the specifications for the engines and boilers are completed. It has been felt that, however necessary, and desirable it may be to increase the size of, and deepen, our present harbors, or to construct new ones on the French coast, it is, above all things, desirable to avoid the delay consequent on such extensive works, and to run a pair of powerful steamers (at the earliest date at which it is possible to get them constructed) between the existing harbors, and thus at once to furnish the accommodation so imperatively demanded by the public, and also allow sufficient time for the harbor question to be settled on a sound basis, and the necessary works to be executed. At the slow rate at which all such marine engineering unfortunately proceeds, without condemning the public to its present miseries during the time the works are in progress. These steamers are of larger dimensions than the famous Holyhead boats, but will only draw seven feet of water, and will each be propelled by engines of 700 horse-power nominal, equal to 4,500 indicated horse-power, and, consequently, with their small immersed area of midship section, be capable of running with ease at a speed of twenty miles per hour. They will be provided with a spacious saloon of 50 feet in length by 30 feet broad, and with a height of 20 feet, and be thoroughly well lighted and ventilated. At each end of the saloon there will be four private rooms for ladies and the same number for gentlemen, the whole being surmounted by a promenade deck of seventy feet in length by a height of seven feet above the ordinary deck of the vessel. The whole of these rooms and the saloon with the promenade deck will be so constructed that a "[illegible]" can, by means of powerful hydraulic apparatus, screw and sustain the whole structure so commodiously and quietly that the passengers will not be subjected to the roughness of weather to a greater amount of motion than is felt in an ordinary railway carriage; each of the rooms and the promenade deck will be at all times accessible by a broad staircase, free from motion and of most easy ascent, so that passengers may enjoy the fresh sea breeze on the quiet, level promenade deck, or, if the weather is unfavorable, descend to the saloon below. The arrangements for the transfer of luggage to and from the vessel are such as to prevent the possibility of injury to it in any way, while it will save much time in its transshipment; and, generally, I may state that the object kept steadily in view in the design and arrangement of these vessels is the greatest possible comfort and convenience of the passengers, the rapidity of transit, and, above all, the prevention of that dreaded malady, sea-sickness, with all its attendant horrors both to the victims above and to their scarcely less fortunate fellow-passengers."

The Marshal in Prison—Once to and Inside Meaux—Prospects of the Trial.

Versailles (Oct. 19) Correspondence of the London Daily Telegraph.

Some Paris newspapers have lately been publishing stories respecting the imprisonment of Marshal Bazaine, which simply prove that the writers have fertile brains for invention. I called upon the distinguished prisoner yesterday, and can testify that nothing has been changed in the surveillance exercised over him, and that his health is very much the same as it was six months ago—save that he would be received on the 16th of August, 1870, at Vionville, from the fragment of a spent shell, has caused him considerable annoyance. To a man who, for half a century, has led an outdoor life, who, for more than thirty years was an active service as a soldier, and who in mind, as well as in body, has never known what it was to pass an idle hour, five months' confinement in a very small house—with the alternative of going out into a garden some forty yards square, in which there are three sentries to overlook him and can see all he does, as well as hear every word he says—would, in all likelihood, cause something akin to insanity. But Bazaine seems to be made of sterner stuff. I found him in very good spirits, and determined, when accused before a Court-martial, to defend himself to the utmost. It is not easy to obtain permission to visit the Marshal. Those who have such permits have—as I had—first to apply to Col. Gaillard, of the Staff Corps, Chef de la Justice Militaire, who submits the name of the applicant to the Marshal himself. If the latter expresses a wish to grant the interview, a pass is given, on which Mr. So-and-so "est autorisé à communiquer avec M. le Maréchal Bazaine"—the pass being duly stamped "Ministère Service de la Justice," and signed by Col. Gaillard—an officer who will not, I trust, take it amiss if I choose this opportunity of thanking him for his great courtesy and kindness towards me when I sought and obtained leave to visit my old acquaintance, now the unfortunate prisoner.

The house in which Marshal Bazaine is confined is a small detached villa at the further end of the Avenue de Picardie, close to the grille, or iron gate, of Versailles, on the road to St. Cloud. It was for many years the domicile of an English gardener named Walters, and the place was afterward rented by Col. Waugh, an Anglo-Indian officer whose name was familiar to newspaper readers some dozen years ago, in connection with the failure of a joint-stock bank in London. The garden and the house are both small—about the size of a Brixton villa, in the suburbs of London for £30 or £35 per annum. The gate of the garden is now of iron, and outside it is a sentry-box, with a soldier of the line on duty. When a visitor approaches the gate, he is told by the sentry not to ring, but to beat on the door, when a non-commissioned officer, who has charge of the premises, opens to admit him, inspects the pass, and calls the Marshal's servant, who takes up the visitor's name to his master. Once inside the garden, I began by realizing the fact that the promised formed part of what are called in the permit, "La Prison Militaire Annexe." There was a sentry close to the windows on the ground floor; another a little to the right of the house, some ten yards distant, a third to the "left front," as a soldier would say, of the drawing-room windows, and a fourth a little further round to the left of the last. No one could, by possibility, move in any part of the small garden without being under the eyes of at least two sentries, nor could any conversation be held in the ground without his soldiers hearing all that was said. About fifteen yards from the house, separated from the rest of the grounds by a thin hedge, are four or five bell tents, in which the guards—a Captain, a subaltern, and fifty men—are quartered. The guards are changed every twenty-four hours. The sentries inside the garden, and also those who water around the premises outside, are doubled every night. There is also a subaltern officer under Col. Gaillard's orders, who resides and sleeps on the premises. The Colonel himself does not sleep in the house, but comes once a day to visit the prisoner. This is a curious contrast to all the show of military precaution was the Marshal's little boy, Achille, a pretty child of some three years old, playing cheerfully in the garden when I went in. The rest of Marshal Bazaine's children—he has five, the eldest only some seven years old—are living with their mother in a house situated in the grounds of the convent Notre Dame de Refuge, a short distance from where the Marshal is confined. They come to see him every day with Mme. Bazaine, and remain from 1 P. M. until dark, when, as everybody is obliged to leave the premises of the "Prison Militaire Annexe," excepting the officials. The Marshal has two Aids-de-camp, both Colonels of the Staff Corps, named Villette and Magnan. These two gentlemen have all along stood by their chief, in evil as well as in good report; and they take it in turn, indeterminate weeks, to share his captivity—the one on duty for the time being considered equally a prisoner with his chief.

I found Marshal Bazaine in very good spirits, considering that for five long months he has been confined to the small house and garden he now occupies. He declares that he has nothing whatever to complain of on the part of those who have charge of him, all of them treating him with as much respect as if he were still in command of the Army of the Rhone. He told me that when, not four days ago, one of his children was dangerously ill, at the house where Mme. Bazaine resides, the Minister of War, unsolicited, sent word that the Marshal might go to see the child, simply accompanied by Col. Gaillard. The danger, however, passed away so quickly that there was no occasion for the proposed indulgence of the Minister's kindness—a kindness which, as the Marshal says, he believes to have been prompted by M. Thiers. Of the latter he speaks in the highest terms. I asked him whether he did not fear the result of the trial. He replied that, if he did, it was only from the fear lest, by defending himself, he would be obliged to show up the incapacity, the want of obedience, the general softness (mollesse) and want of energy in others, over which it would have been far better if they could be kept in the shade. What I mentioned in my former letter, that he has never been told upon what charges he is to be tried, of what crime he is deemed guilty, or whether it is of a military or of a political offense that he is accused. I spoke of the accusation from time to time reiterated by the Red Radical press, that more than once he had, while in command at Metz, held interviews with Prince Frederick Charles and other German Generals. He laughed heartily at the idea, and replied: "Now, my dear Sir, do you, who have been a military man, really believe it possible for an officer commanding a large army than was assembled in the Crimea to slip in and out of an invested town like a camp-follower who wants to steal a few vegetables? Is not an officer holding such a command always under the eyes of a dozen or more staff officers, aide-de-camp, officers of his escort, and the like? Would it have been possible for me to meet any of the German chiefs without the facts being known to at least five or six officers, and the news afterward getting wind throughout the city of Metz? When has any officer of the immense army I commanded ever hinted at anything of the kind? I held, of course, written intercourse with the Prince; I was obliged to do so in order to settle the terms of the surrender; but I never, or spoke to one of them until I gave my word of honor, as prisoner, "for one of not making more vigorous sorties from Metz at the commencement. Listen." Here the Marshal read me certain dispatches from officers under his orders, which showed plainly that as early as the 20th of August, there existed a large amount of that mollesse of which I spoke, and at any rate among some of his immediate subordinates. "No," he continued; "we were, for more reasons than one, utterly unfit for a European warfare, particularly against an army which had a fire-rate artillery, and in which every man obeyed the superior without a word of remonstrance, from the private soldier up to the general officer who followed out to the letter what the commander of his corps directed."

A San Francisco Jury's Estimate of the Value of a Life.

From the San Francisco Chronicle, Oct. 17.

In the Fifteenth District Court yesterday, Judge Dwinelle, on motion of counsel for plaintiff, set aside the verdict in the case of G. D. Mariani against George Dougherty. The action was brought to recover damages for the death of Guiseppe Mariani, alleged to have been caused by being struck with a rock, hurled from a blast fired by defendant while prosecuting his grading operations at Norta Beach. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for $200. The plaintiff thought the sum too small and moved for a new trial. Judge Dwinelle, in granting the motion, said that he considered the verdict a mockery of justice. If the jury had rendered a verdict for the defendant, he would not have felt justified in disturbing it; but he could not comprehend how they could find for the plaintiff and yet say on their oaths that the life of the deceased was not worth more than $200. He would be removed was inserted in their oath, the well-known Major Gen. Stryker. He dec

OLD HOUSES.

John Hopper's Homestead, Corner of Broadway and Fiftieth-Street.

Description of a Farm-House of the Last Century—The House which John Hopper Built for His Sons.

As New-York was colonized in early times by two distinct nationalities, the seeker after ancient things has a right to expect that he will find some traces of both. Nor will he be disappointed. While the Beekman house presents to the imagination the beau ideal of the bowery, or country-house of the wealthy merchants of Holland, the old Hopper homestead on Broadway and Fiftieth-street represents the farm-houses built by English colonists. It is true that in the early history of New-York all the salient features are Dutch, but it must not be forgotten that from the time of the second occupation a small but steady English immigration set in. There were at that era many political and religious reasons for the preference which English settlers gave to New-England, and more especially did these reasons affect persons of high standing and of liberal education. But there was in spite of this a small stream of colonists directed toward Manhattan Island, even from the days of Sir Edward Andross, the first Governor regularly appointed by the Duke of York. Among these was the ancestor of John Hopper, who, in 1730, built the homestead which is the subject of this article. His farm of 300 acres, held by a grant from Andross, marched to the eastward with the great farm of Dr. Girardin Beekman, and to the westward extended to the Hudson River. He was an exceedingly prosperous man, for while his ancestors had vegetated upon the farm, living half as farmers, half as hunters, the great increase of the City, down in the southern part of Manhattan Island had made a market for him and compelled him to be rich and energetic. Providence had blessed him with three sons, and he determined to build for each a stone house, and to accompany the gift with a farm of 100 acres, reserving to himself the ownership of one, which was destined ultimately for his youngest son, Andrew. The house for his eldest son, John, was built upon the bank of the Hudson River, between what are now Fiftieth and Fifty-second streets. The house of Yellis Hopper, his second son, was erected on Fifty-first-street, between Broadway and Eighth-avenue, and the homestead for himself and his youngest son he built where it now stands. To protect it from the masterful west winds which howl across the Hudson in Winter time, in the most unpleasant fashion, he planted a great row of Lombardy poplars, the pitiful skeletons of which stand despairingly on Broadway to this day. The house itself has been tenderly preserved. Andrew Hopper never married during his father's lifetime, but when quite old was united to a young widow, a daughter of a Mr. Guest. She became attached to the place, and spared no expense to keep it in order, and to cultivate the garden which surrounded it. At her death she bequeathed it to her brother from whom it descended to his daughter, Mrs. Heelas, who has sold the place to Mr. Suyern. But as in the present condition of Broadway and Seventh-avenue, building does not promise any great remuneration, he leases the house to Mrs. Heelas, and probably that family may live in it for many years. The traveler voyaging to the Central Park can hardly have failed to have noticed the unfortunate place so tumbled from its high estate. The house, which is in excellent condition, is nearly hidden from view by great, melancholy willows, on the eastern side, facing Seventh-avenue, and on the Broadway side the gloomy, broken, shattered Lombardy poplars form a kind of screen. From Fifty-first-street nothing of the homestead can be seen, because a broad strip of the block has been sold at some time or other by the family, and this has been fenced off with a high wooden structure, the ground so protected being occupied by the remains of old wagons and débris of every description. The front on Fiftieth-street is quite pleasing, and presents a fair specimen of a cozy English farm-house, for which shingles of wood have been used in roofing instead of thatch. But the peculiarity of the thatched house, that is, its easy slope, necessitated by the manner of putting on the materials, has been preserved; and, moreover, in compliance to the American fashion of piazzas, this great sloping roof has been brought forward over the walls so as to form with its eaves the top of the piazza. This novel idea has resulted in giving the house the appearance of being all roof, and it looks pretty much as a boy dressed with his father's hat on his tiny head. Lodged in this roof are two attic windows, with old-fashioned glass panes. The rear is exactly a counterpart of the front. At some time or other an extension was built out toward Seventh-avenue, but this was of brick, with an upper floor of wood. Entering the front door of the homestead, the visitor finds himself in a handsome little hall, built quite square, with the stair-case leading to the attics, which, by the bye, are quite large rooms, directly in front. To the right is the great room which, in all probability, was the public kitchen of the first occupants. The fireplace is quite handsome and the chimney-piece is of carved oak, yet the partition-wall between this room and the one in rear is of such enormous size as to warrant the conjecture that the chimney is inclosed in it, and must be of unusual size. The room in rear is of the same length, but has only one third of the width, which would make it too narrow for the bustling labors of a farm kitchen. When the extension was built out and devoted to culinary purposes, the great room was trimmed up and a handsome cornice added. The great, yawning fireplace, with its metal supports for the huge logs, was suffered to remain, but Mrs. Andrew Hopper's successor changed it to the present shape of modern coal-fires. There is a third room on the ground-floor of the original stone building, which is under the stair-case and is reached by a corridor leading from the hall, arched and carved in the old style. This little room was undoubtedly the store-room, for exactly underneath it is the milk-house, built into the foundation with the largest stones that could be found. It was an awkward place to get into before the change was made in the grading, for one had to bend double before one could enter. There was a kind of rough shelving along which the pans of milk were placed, and the place was so sheltered from the sun that even in the hottest weather the milk was kept sweet and deliciously cool. Amateurs of milk in those days used to descend fearlessly into the place itself, in spite of aching backs, to quaff the fluid before it should become warmed by exposure to the outer air. Old people who remember these things say that the system was infinitely better than our modern one, for the milk tasted better, and was healthier because the constant use of ice numbs the great ganglion in the stomach.

The attics up stairs are large, comfortable rooms, but of the four two only belonged to the original house. Mrs. Andrew Hopper added those in the rear, bringing down the roof in the same way over the same plans that characterized the extension built on the front of the house. The piazza, no doubt, looked out upon a beautiful garden, but now the scene is the most desolate that can be imagined. Everything has grown according to its fantasy, and the weeds, the children of the soil, have dispossessed their half-relations, the flowers. Here and there, one may discover some hardy flowering plant that will dispute the field, but the general aspect of the place may be summed up as tall, luxurious weeds, and broken, dingy shrubs. The grass growing long and thick and it is sincerely wished by kids the desolation, and waves mournfully in the wind in answer to the moanings of the great willows and the complainings of the unhappy-looking poplars. Fat hens stack about, evidently mistresses of the situation, and run to and fro for worms and seeds through the overgrowed melons and over the cabbage patches of vegetables. There are old fruit-trees, too, on which there has been no fruit for many years, but on whose trunks are beautiful specimens of lichens and insect mysteries that would delight the soul of an entomologist. A wilderness, perhaps, has an odd effect—be seen hiding behind some overgrown place, watching for sparrows, which the sparrows upon and devours with the ferocity of a tigress. No child is ever seen to wander about the place, but occasionally an old, a very old servant, a woman, with a face resembling a thousand wrinkles, pattern about the cabbages, and or goes to the well. Sometimes, too, an old lady in the Spring time and the flush Summer, wanders about what was once a garden, and inhales the fragrance of the lilacs.

The house which Jan Hopper, the first, built for his son Yellis, on Fifty-first-street, between Broadway and Eighth-avenue, has completely passed away, and the site is occupied by a marble-yard. But other has been the fortune of that which he built for his eldest son, John. Some great-nephews, descendants of the founder, who inherited the Stryker name, and whose ancestor, the well-known Major Gen. Stryker. He dec in 1853, after having lived there more than fifty years. In the interval of time he altered and modernized the house, which was in general construction, very much like the Hopper homestead. He had inherited with the home a considerable slice of the hundred acres of farm that went with it, and of his share he retained seven acres, reaching from Eleventh-avenue to the river, and from Fiftieth-street to Fifty-second. These he converted into gardens and paddock. He was a man of considerable taste, and he laid out this large space very beautifully, though in somewhat of the old-fashioned style. He had beautiful lawns and fine flower-beds, but the two were kept distinct, and the latter were arranged in formal geometric figures, with huge borders of box-wood. The evergreens were clipped into fantastic forms, and the flowers were allowed to grow to a great height, these being principally those which delight more by their fragrance than their color. In short, it was something very similar to Lady Corlaine's garden in Disraeli's novel. He was a lover of fine trees, and he imported English walnuts, oaks and pines, which he inserted indiscriminately with the American originals in his grounds. He constructed a fish-pond at the bottom of the garden, and built out beyond it a sort of fairy lake, all stone-work and clustering vines, making the two with a rustic bridge. He imported a choice breed of peacocks, who have multiplied until their cheerful cry has become somewhat a nuisance to the neighborhood. And being in his way a lover of art, he filled the winding walks of his beautiful grounds with choice statuary, rampant lions, dragons, English hounds, &c. The reader which the connoisseur will remember in the sculpture of the manufacturers of fancy chimney pots. The General being a very popular man, and one greatly given to hospitality, was extremely fond of entertaining the distinguished men of the Democratic Party, of which he was a shining light, and accordingly the fame of the old house became great among New-Yorkers. To visit at the Stryker house was an envied privilege, and the inmates of the Hopper mansion were among the happy ones. Perhaps in those days their house did not look so desolate, but from its appearance now the surroundings must have been neglected for many years. It must have awakened queer emotions in them whenever they visited the Stryker mansion. For it had been built by the same old John Hopper, and in the time his homestead was the place of resource for all of them, and was by far the finest and the roomiest. But year by year the one house had been rising in prestige, and the other had been falling it, until, as for the last reached the position of being a Municipal ruin, and the other was the most dreary house on the island. The Stryker House is admirably preserved by its present owners, Mr. and Mrs. Stryker. They keep up the garden with all the traditionary splendor of the Stryker name, and are well unmapped. But there is a fly in the ointment, as the Arabs say; a drop of bitter in their cup. The line of Fifty-first-street will cut their house right in half, if attempted to be done. Hitherto the end of the street has been left untouched, for two reasons, first, because the Hudson River Railway, as represented by Mr. Vanderbilt, did not care to, and, secondly, because Mr. Stryker was in himself a majority of the property owners concerned in the matter. But some arrangement must be come to sooner or later, and it is to be hoped that it will be one which will spare one of the very few beautiful spots in New-York which modern progress has left untouched. Stryker's Bay Bridge, the old homestead built by Jacobus Stryker in 1646, has been preserved in the amicability might strain a point for the benefit of a descendant of one of the first founders of their City, a contemporary Magistrate with Guilielmus Beekman.

THE FRIENDS.

Yearly Meeting of the Society, in Baltimore—Interesting Proceedings.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

BALTIMORE, Md., Monday, Oct. 28, 1872.

The annual meeting of one great branch of the Friends is now going on here, at their meeting-house on Lombard-street, and has drawn together a much larger number of its members than usual. They represent a denomination that has been foremost in nearly all the great reforms of the age, particularly on the subjects of war, temperance, a free Gospel ministry, and slavery, or, to express it in a single phrase, their opposition to all kinds of oppression. The interest excited among many who are not members of the Friends' Society is so great that yesterday the house was three times crowded to its utmost capacity. Among the notable musicians in attendance we see the venerable Benjamin Hallowell, formerly of Alexandria, Va., where for many years he conducted a school, in which many prominent Southerners were pupils, among them the afterward distinguished Gen. Robert E. Lee. Benjamin Hallowell is one of the originators of the present system of governmental management of Indian affairs, and is one of President Grant's most trusted advisers on the subject. He is about seventy years of age, and was once robust, but shows something of the frailty of old age. He is not a fluent speaker, but is a ready writer, and one of the best educated men in the country, being particularly eminent as a naturalist. He has written much upon social and philosophical subjects, and is one of the leading minds in the Friends denomination.

The Janney's are also prominent members of this yearly meeting. Samuel M. Janney is a widely-known Virginian, who has also been connected with the Indian Service, having been Superintendent in charge of one Indian Department for three years, sacrificing the comforts of home and friends, and solely on account of what he felt to be a religious duty required of him, laboring for the benefit of the savage wards of the nation. His brother, Asa M. Janney, who occupied a similar position with another branch of the Indian Service, is here also. Samuel M. is another who stands high in the estimation of Friends. His principal works are a Life of William Penn, and a History of Friends, but he is a fine essayist, and a volume of poems that he published some years ago merits much warm commendation. Among the other notable men of the meeting is the venerable John Needles, now in his eighty-fifth year, who has attended for sixty-four years without ever missing a single meeting. He was formerly quaker and must be of unusual size. The room in which he trades a good many years ago and has since devoted himself to philanthropic objects. He is one of the finest, most benevolent men living.

William Dorsey, a prominent and eloquent minister from Philadelphia, is regarded as one of the strong men of the meeting.

Two young men who have lately come into the ministry give, by their zeal and deportment, great promise of future usefulness. One of them is Eugene D. Conrad, of New-Jersey, and the other James W. Haynes, of Ohio. The former is only twenty-two, and the latter twenty-four years of age. The most prominent female minister here is Mary Lippincott, of Philadelphia.

The excellent Lucretia Mott used to attend all the meetings, but her advanced age and other circumstances have kept her away for the last two or three years. We miss, also, George Truman, the most eloquent of the Quaker preachers in this country. The most interesting feature of the meeting will be the report from the Committee having charge of Indian Affairs, as it will furnish reliable information of matters on our Western frontier. Another feature of much interest is the conference of Friends from all parts of the country in reference to First-day schools (Sunday-schools). These were formerly discountenanced by many members of the society, but it is found that they awaken denominational interest among young persons, and are productive of much good, and the opposition to them is rapidly dying out. ### Life at the Penrhyn Slate Quarries.

In a letter from a special correspondent of the London Daily News we read: "In many respects—it may be said, indeed, in every respect but one—the manner in which Lord Penrhyn, as the proprietor of these vast quarries, and as the employer of the great labor power required for working them, acquits himself of his responsibilities is entitled to upon all those regards demands the most unqualified admiration. The most untiring exertions are made to make of this busy hive a happy valley. There has not been a vestige of truck at Penrhyn Quarries for the last forty-seven years. The only deductions made in the wages of the men are for the requisite tools and blasting powder, and these are supplied at prime cost. In was but the other day, when a landslip buried a number of tools, that Lord Penrhyn gave £400 to fit out anew the men who had lost their implements. Thanks to care and science, the number of serious accidents are few—over a series of years they average, I was informed, but 45. But when a workman is killed, Lord Penrhyn pensions his widow and rears his children. He has his own medical, containing twelve beds, the arrangements of which are of the very best character. There is a resident surgeon, an assistant, a nurse, and two attendants; the walls of the wards are hung with pictures; for grown people there is a library; for children there are toys. The number of cases just now is four, and it was good to see them recovering in clean beds and amid fresh air, with flowering shrubs peeping in at the open windows, and the soothing murmur of the Ogden gently audible. The subscription of the fund is one shilling weekly for each workman. For this he is given medical attendance and medicine, the hospital if thought needed, three shillings six pence a week of allowance in sickness to the single man not in hospital, and the same to the wife and family of a married man even although the husband should be somewhat of a quarrelsome character. Nor is not be said that the unsubsidized subscriptions of the workpeople could not do all this, and I am told that Lord Penrhyn's contribution to maintain this fund in its efficiency is scarcely large. The education of the young is sedulously cared for. There are four national schools on the Penrhyn property, in addition to which Lord Penrhyn subscribes to a school in Bethesda, which village does not belong to him. The two salaries of the teachers are paid, and buildings, books, maps, films, and lectures are furnished by Lord Penrhyn, the nominal charge being made of 1d. per week per child, and 1½d. for two children of one family. The house accommodation is almost universally good. On the Penrhyn estate there are a number of cottages which, while their gardens are on its very moderate rents, and are kept in thorough repair as the proprietor's cost, every facility is given for the men to build themselves, and a large number of cottages have been built on plots of land, held household for a term of three years, at ground rents which are next to nominal the landlord making the roads and the sewerage, and keeping them in repair. Then there are blankets and clothing funds, and coal funds, and other kindly little institutions of a like character, all of which have their origin in the benevolence of Penrhyn Castle. In fine, it has been deeply impressed upon me that, with a few reservations I am forced to make, it is impossible for any proprietor to recognize and fulfil the obligations of property with greater liberality and with a freer hand than does the proprietor of the Penrhyn Slate Quarries. Nor is his good work barren. The quarry folk live orderly, sober, and decent lives under the broad shadow of the wing of Penrhyn—lives very different to those led by the

SANITARY MEASURES.

Important Meeting of the Board of Health Yesterday.

The Removal and Transportation of Brewers' Grains—The War Between the Sewer-gas and the Odorless Excavating Company—The Horse Disease.

A very important session of the Board of Health was held yesterday, President Bosworth in the chair.

The Sanitary Committee, to whom was referred the subject of the removal of brewers' grains from the City, presented the following report:

To the Board of Health:

The question of removal of the remains of grain used in the operation of making beer, ale, &c., from the vicinity of breweries in this City, has been referred to the Sanitary Committee, the following is respectfully submitted: The residuary of malt or grain, generally barley, produced in the making of beer, ale, &c., in the sixty odd breweries within our City, amounts to about one-third of a million of bushels, if not more, within a year. The value of this so-called brewers' grain as food for cattle and hogs is not represented by the low price the brewers get for it; but owing to the rural districts it is worth four times the amount paid for it in the City. Nearly all the phosphates of the grain, as well as a portion of its fatty and oleaginous compounds are retained in the shell obtained by the process of washing, constituting it a valuable nutriment in the fattening of domestic animals destined for the meat market, as well as the milk cows.

During the season of beer-making these grain-shells are accumulating in the breweries so fast and in such large quantities as to become a burden and impediment to the brewers, if no provision for their speedy removal is made. This inconvenience, within a brief time, would be so great as to completely block up the business of the just-named tradesmen. A nuisance or a sanitary reason the grain in question can only be by neglect, carelessness and the want of proper precaution in the loading and removing of the same. If the material is allowed during the hot season to lie and exposed for hours or days to the rays of the sun, fermentation will set in, and by degrees it will turn sour and putrid, the same change will take place with the drippings from the grain, if allowed to soak the premises instead of being washed off and carried into a sewer. All these complaints, however, could be easily removed, if persons contracting and following provisions, rules and regulations for the manufacturers and carriers of the brewery grains:

First. The grain loaded at the breweries shall be carried in wagons sufficiently tight as regards their boxes to avoid any dripping from the same while passing through the streets or public thoroughfares.

Second. The unloading of said wagons in the rail road yard shall be conducted in a cleanly manner, and the grain falling to the ground not suffered to remain and accumulate, but be taken up and removed with the grain.

Third. The railroad yard where the grains are received and loaded on the cars shall be provided with proper gutters, connected with the sewer, in order to carry off the drippings of any of said grains.

Fourth. The grains shading of the cars must not accumulate in said gutters, but be likewise taken up and carried away.

Fifth. Exception in severe winter weather, no loading of brewery grains outside the yard of the railroad company, or on any street or public thoroughfare, shall be allowed, and the loaded cars shall not stand on the sidings longer than is absolutely necessary for fermentation will set in, and by degrees it will turn sour and putrid, the same change will take place with the drippings from the grains, if allowed to soak the premises instead of being washed off and carried into a sewer. All these complaints, however, could be easily removed, if persons contracting and following provisions, rules and regulations for the manufacturers and carriers of the brewery grains:

Although the Greeleyites feel in their bones that they are going to be horribly beaten next week, they still hope that they will snatch such a victory in the Congressional Districts as will enable them to harass and obstruct the Administration during its next term. That is all the Democrats are now fighting for. As the World let out yesterday, they want to "build up so formidable an opposition as will give the Grant party pause." We must frustrate this scheme. It would be very unfair to the Administration to elect it without giving it an adequate support in Congress. We say then, again and again, look after your Congressmen. Do all you can to help the good men, and to defeat fellows like the "Big Judge," JAMES BROOKS, FERNANDO WOOD, &c. Do not let us leave our work half done. We entreat our friends everywhere to pay the utmost attention to the constitution of the Forty-third Congress. Upon it the success of the Administration will mainly depend.

We all know by this time the sort of "principle" which has induced a section of the Democratic Party to take HORACE GREELEY as its candidate. It is as well, however, to hear the reasons occasionally from Democratic mouths. The New-York World of yesterday thus makes a clean breast of it: "It is evident that if GRANT is re-elected, no Democrat will have a place in his Cabinet, or any influence in his Administration; whereas, if Mr. GREELEY is the next President, a majority of his advisers will consist of Democratic statesmen." There you have the mask stripped off with a vengeance. The issue is put plainly before us—if GREELEY is elected, the Democrats will seize the Government. And not only the Democrats, but the very worst class of Democrats in the land, for respectable men are, as a rule, standing aloof from the conspiracy. Are the people willing to accept Democratic rule of such a kind and under such conditions?

The Tribune of yesterday has the following ungrateful stab at CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, E. O. PERRY, FERNANDO WOOD, A. M. BLISS, ERASTUS BROOKS, and a long list of other old Know-Nothing politicians, who have been working hard all Summer in writing and making speeches for HORACE GREELEY:

"Your neighbor who frankly tells you that he will vote for no man of your religious faith, and therefore votes against you, takes you manly and openly. But if that same neighbor were to speak by night into a closed lodge-room, and there take an oath that he would never vote for a man of your faith, keeping such oath a secret from you, he would treat you most unfairly and unmanly."

Now, CHAUNCEY DEPEW, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, has done the very thing which the Tribune here condemns. He has taken a secret oath never to support any Catholic—and yet he is on the same ticket with a Catholic. What then, are we to think of CHAUNCEY DEPEW?

"It is very true," says the Professor, "that the country owes much to Gen. GRANT's persistence and military skill during the war." This is a new discovery on the part of FATHER'S pupil. For the last four or five months he has continually sneered at GRANT'S military record. Now he finds that even the remaining readers of the Tribune object to the process of throwing mud on the uniform of the conqueror of LEE, and he is forced to confine his libels to President GRANT, instead of abusing with equal impartiality GRANT the soldier and GRANT the statesman. Or, is it possible that, as a last desperate attempt to defeat the Republican candidate, the Tribune is to ostensibly advocate him? That would, indeed, be a heavy blow to the Republican cause.

We have abstained from making any comment on the merits of the case against Mayor HALL while the trial was in progress. The correction of a statement made by Mr. STOUGHTON, yesterday, on behalf of his client is not a breach of the rule we have observed. The counsel for the defense endeavored to make a little capital for the accused by claiming for him the credit of appointing Controller GREEN. The facts are these: When Controller CONNOLLY, on the advice of Mr. HAVEMEYER, appointed Mr. GREEN his deputy, in September, 1871, and practically resigned to him the charge of the Finance Department, Mayor HALL not only refused to accept the official oath of the Acting Controller, but refused to acknowledge his official position at all, and sent a circular round to the heads of the various local departments, advising them to take a similar course. Mayor HALL pressed the acceptance of the Controllership, which he held had become vacant by CONNOLLY'S act, upon Gen. MCCLELLAN, as well as upon other persons whom it was thought the Ring could trust. It was only on account of the impossibility of getting anybody to accept the position that a violent conflict for the possession of the Controller's office was averted. Mr. HAVEMEYER received the resignation of Controller CONNOLLY on the understanding that it was only to be given up in exchange for the appointment of Mr. GREEN. For several weeks Mayor HALL refused to comply with this condition, and it was only after the vote of the 7th of November last had left no doubt that the doom of the Ring was sealed that the Mayor signed the appointment of Mr. GREEN "for the full term." As to the amount of credit which he can claim for a course of action like this, we may safely leave the public to decide.

During the past two months we have announced the loss either by fire or wreck of four large ocean steam-ships, and today a fifth disaster is added to the list, with circumstances, as to loss of human life, even more terrible than any that have preceded it. We cannot think that those in charge of the ill-fated Missouri were properly informed as to their duties, the manner in which one boat after another was swamped inevitably suggesting this conclusion. Certainly, if Government investigation shall substantiate this supposition, some other results ought to attend it than mere formal censure, and vague recommendations regarding neglected precautions.

The hope of the future is in the young men of today, and all sincere Reformers will lose faith in the possibility of good government in this City if the Young Men's Municipal Reform Association fails to give as effective aid to the cause of Reform as it did last year. The struggle in favor of public honesty needs, at the present juncture, just such energy, activity and intelligence as these young men can bring into its ranks. They can help us to bring out a full vote, can guard unwary voters against the tricks of politicians, and can, in a dozen different ways, strengthen the hands of the people who are honestly striving to start the City on a new career of honest administration and general prosperity. The aid of the young Reformers cannot be dispensed with this year, and the resolve to finish a good work well begun ought to be sufficient incitement to renewed effort.

The signature of nearly every prominent business house in the City, will be found appended to the call for a mass-meeting to be held at the corner of Wall and Broad streets on Friday, at noon, to ratify the nomination of Mr. W. F. HAVEMEYER for Mayor. We trust that the signers of the call will not only be present to assist in making the meeting the imposing demonstration it ought to be, but that as soon as possible after 6 o'clock on the morning of Nov. 5 they will cast their votes and see that their friends do the same, for the Reform candidates.

The Fresh Fight for the Union.

The fight of next Tuesday is really a fight for the Union. To be sure, it is not fought with shot and shell, like Gettysburg or Vicksburg. But that which is fought for is so far the same, and those who fight are so far the same, that the struggle becomes almost identical. Precisely the same men yearn for the defeat of Gen. GRANT now, who yearned for his defeat in the Wilderness and at Five Forks. Precisely the same men who abused President LINCOLN, stirred up revolt against the draft, hung negroes to lamp-posts, in New-York, and approved of their crucifixion at Fort Pillow, are now rampant for GREELEY and opposed to the party of the Union. Victory or defeat now, as then, means the encouragement or discouragement of the principles battled for from '61 to '65, and which aimed to secure the permanence and solidity of the Republic. Victory or defeat now, as then, would shape, and in a serious measure determine, nearly all those vast issues of public policy, to settle which the American people rose in their might and put down the rebellion.

These are strong statements, but not too strong. We have shown, over and over again, how the prominent men in the South, who were Secessionists and are Greeleyites, are exactly the men who go about talking of the ultimate triumph of the "Lost Cause," and breathing mysterious prophecies of the means that are to revive it at an early future. We have shown how the Northern men who aided during hostilities the Government at critical moments during the war, are now, as then, in the same faction. JEFF. DAVIS and JUBAL EARLY are for GREELEY now, just as Gen. BUTLER and SHERMAN and SHERIDAN are for GRANT. Let the Greeleyites say what they will about particular questions of rebel pensions and States rights and carpet-baggers and finance, the stubborn fact remains that the people anxious for sinister results from their possible success, and that this has been made clear at every turn. When the Federal troops won a battle, gold went up and stocks went down. So it has been with every political encounter, the effect of which seemed hopeful for GREELEY. When the Federal troops won a battle, gold went down and stocks went up. And so, during the campaign, have like political mutations been followed by parallel results. This has been so uniform and so remarkable as, of itself, to warrant positive conclusions. The Wall-street barometer is a pretty trusty one, and no "fresh looks at the tables" can possibly upset its teachings. If we turn to the public journals we find the same lesson. The same pure and delicate metropolitan sheet that did its best to help the rebel cause is now doing its best to help GREELEY. Go through the whole country and, with few exceptions, you see a repetition of the same story; and the readers naturally reflect the opinions—or originate them—which are given forth by their favorite newspapers. The same portions of the old Democratic Party whom Mr. GREELEY used to call "drunkards, pimps, and cutthroats"—the men, we mean, of the Sixth Ward and corner-grocery stripe, are now all hot for the "Sage of Chappaqua." And so, too, all the old "Buck" Pometroy and "Ben" Wood gang, the people who think the Express "high toned" paper, and who used to prate about "bastiles," and maunder about States rights when the Government was in a life and death grapple with the rebellion, are now hoarse with yelling for GREELEY, and telling each other what a nice kind of President he would make.

It is impossible to mistake these things, and impossible to deny them. They mean, we repeat, that this is another fight for the Union. It is all very well for our opponents to say it is nothing of the sort. But when troops march into the field, with the same uniforms and the same standards, and blowing the same trumpets and exchanging the same watch-words, that we all knew so well in the four years after Sumter, we stick to our own opinion, and think that those whom Mr. LINCOLN used to call "the plain people" will stick to it, too. To them, everywhere, we now address ourselves, and say: You must come out in your strength next Tuesday, as your noble army did, and give this fresh treason against the country its death-blow forever. You must work on Tuesday from sunrise to sunset, heartily, incessantly, you, and all the friends and neighbors you can muster. Remember it is really for the good-old flag. All its old enemies are marshaled against it. We are still too near the war to let them have even a show of success. We have crossed most of the stream, but there is an ugly bit of marsh and quagmire still, and the time to "swap horses" has not yet arrived. Let every Union man, every wife, mother, sister, who had a soldier in the war, work from this moment, then, in the good cause; and by next Wednesday morning there will be no more to be seen of the wretched hulk of Greeleyism than there was to be seen of the Alabama off Cherbourg, on that fine day in June, eight years ago, after her brief but unpleasant encounter with the Kearsarge.

A Good Judicial Nomination.

Our merchants are now about collecting their November dividends. Our Banks and Insurance Companies and Life Companies and Trust Associations are beginning to make up their books for the year. People with invested property are looking at their securities, and wondering what the interest from them will be during the coming year. One and all will find a new and heavy charge against their property in the shape of increased taxation, owing to the frauds of the Ring last year. Bank dividends are smaller, returns from Life and Fire Insurance are diminished, all securities in this City are of less value—because WILLIAM M. TWEED, SWEENY, CONNOLLY, INGERSOLL & Co. were to be permitted to indulge in marble stables and fast horses and magnificent villas, and great estates, stolen out of the public treasury. But it is not merely the rich who feel these frauds. Every man, woman and child in this City is paying now, in higher rents and increased taxes, for all the plastering and plumbing and furnishing which helped, for a few years past, to make up the robberies of the Ring. The twenty millions come out of all our hard-earned wages and salaries.

In considering how they will vote next Tuesday, it would be well for our citizens to remember these facts, and to ask, "Which one of the local candidates will be most likely to check frauds?" "Which one will be most committed to Reform?" If we recall the robberies which have made us all poorer, we shall see that there was one element which especially rendered them possible. No TWEED or SWEENY could have succeeded thus if it had not been for a corrupt Judiciary. A BARNARD and CARDOZO made a CONNOLLY or TWEED what they have been. Such gigantic swindling would never have been attempted had there been pure and incorruptible Judges on the Bench. These public robbers always knew that they held the Judges by their pockets; and that, if they were brought to bay, the Court-room would shelter them.

Far more important for any voter is his vote for Judge than for any other office. It is an unfortunate system which puts the appointment of the Judiciary in the hands of the constituencies. But as it is there, each citizen must do his duty conscientiously; and the upper Courts are as important as the lower. All should have same men on the seats which tradition and public weal require should be kept free from all contamination. We have spoken frequently of many of our Judicial nominations, but we desire, in the public interest, to especially commend one. We mean that of Mr. HOOPER C. VAN VORST, by the Committee of Seventy and the Republican Party, to the Superior Court. Mr. VAN VORST is one of those gentlemen whom this City needs in public life—a man of elevated character and fine culture—interested in education and all enterprises of humanity and philanthropy, with a sound judicial mind, and much experience as a lawyer. He has been one of the most active promoters of Municipal reform, and was President of the Reform organization of the Nineteenth Ward. In the Board of Education, his services as Commissioner have been most valuable. As Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, to which seat he was appointed in 1867, he distinguished himself by the clearness and impartiality of his decisions. He is an honest, conscientious Judge, and would protect the interests of our citizens and of justice as they should be protected. Let every voter remember that in voting for Judge VAN VORST, he helps to guard himself and the City against future frauds and rascalities, and to inaugurate "the rule of honest men."

The danger before us, next Tuesday, is too great confidence. Our merchants will stay at home, because they are sure GREELEY is to be beaten. But remember, we are not sure about any of our City nominations. We must work if we would succeed with them; and upon them depends much of our prosperity and comfort during the next few years.

The Last Meeting of the Canvass.

The Wednesday meetings at Cooper Institute were closed last evening. They have been in many respects noteworthy. Without recourse to any extraordinary means to collect a crowd, and with entire abstinence from fire-works, &c., these meetings have every week been attended by large and intelligent audiences; and they have been ably addressed by some of the best public men of the country. They have done great good to the Republican cause, and the moderation and good sense with which they have been conducted have been highly creditable to the State Committee. The meeting last evening was a very large one, the hall of the Union being packed to suffocation, and every available inch of standing-room occupied.

We ask all our readers' attention to the list of officers. It is the strongest ever made up for a political meeting in this City. Contrast it with the lists of officers of the Greeley meetings, and judge on which side the men most respected for character and ability in this community are to be found. Every calling contributes its most eminent members. Law, medicine, the clergy, and the Press are represented by distinguished names; and the mercantile class throughout the country will know the value of the long list of influential names included among the Vice-Presidents. There are too many to recite even the most prominent, here. Let every one read the list for himself.

The reception given to Mr. BOUTWELL was a very hearty one. He was loudly cheered when he rose to speak, and his clear and forcible address was listened to closely and frequently applauded. The Secretary made a plain, straightforward statement of his conception of Gen. GRANT's character, a brief explanation of the objects contemplated in the Treasury policy, and a sharp criticism of Mr. GREELEY's financial notions. He studiously refrained, not only from ad captandum appeals, in which he never indulges, but even from any attempt to arouse party feeling in his audience. His testimony concerning the President was simple, dignified, and conclusive. His analysis of Mr. GREELEY's pet lunacies in finance was severe, but couched in perfectly courteous terms. Touching his statement of the Treasury policy, it was very plain that the audience understood and approved it. The Administration, according to Mr. BOUTWELL, had aimed to collect the taxes thoroughly, to reduce them as rapidly as possible, and to pay as much of the public debt as it could. It had collected the taxes so thoroughly that the same tax laws yielded forty-seven per cent. more under GRANT than under JOHNSON. It had reduced taxation by over one hundred and fifty millions a year. It had paid over three hundred and fifty millions of the debt. The record is one of simple honesty and common sense, and the audience greeted it in a way that showed how closely it conforms to the popular ideas. If there ever had been a chance of the Democracy capturing the Government under cover of Mr. GREELEY's name, that gentleman's confused, shifting, uncertain theories of financial management would have made that chance of no avail.

Speaker BLAINE was received with even more feeling than Mr. BOUTWELL, and in a way which showed that the constant and base attacks on his character have not shaken the popular confidence in him. They have, in fact, only made him better known, and the thorough refutations of them have brought his solid qualities to the attention of the people. His address was cogent and argumentative. He summed up the really great issues of the canvass in a powerful manner, and appealed only to the reason and conscience of his hearers. His speech was a fitting conclusion to the long and valuable series of arguments and appeals made in these Wednesday evening meetings.

Facts to be Remembered.

On Jan. 1, 1869, the debt of the City and County of New-York amounted to $36,269,000. Today, the City and County debt exceeds one hundred millions of dollars. Increase in less than four years, sixty-four millions of dollars.

In 1869 the rate of taxation was $3 87 per $100; in 1872 it is $2 90 per $100. The two per cent. rate of 1871 was an egregious swindle, as it failed to provide for nine months' expenditures, and left a debt of over twelve millions of dollars to be added to the liabilities of the City.

The rate of 1869, had there been honest government in the interest, would have amply sufficed for our wants now. A small property-owner, therefore, who pays taxes on, say, his thousand dollars of real estate, has the satisfaction of paying this year sixty-three dollars to account of the stealings of the Tammany gang of office-holders. This must be continued for several years to come, because the debt was trebled by three years of misrule, and we are merely paying interest on it, and can but very slowly pay it off.

Were our local obligations to be allowed to increase at the rate they did during the reign of Tammany, it would take less than thirty years to make the City and County debt equal to a mortgage of fifty per cent. on all the real estate of Manhattan Island. Long before this, of course, the City would be hopelessly bankrupt, its commerce gone, its industries transferred, and its property worthless.

For the sixty-four millions added to our debt, the Tammany Ring left us next to nothing. The Central Park was practically completed before 1869; money enough had been paid before then to build and furnish the new Court-house twice over; the expenditures on the new piers and docks were only begun; and the work on the City parks and the Croton Aqueduct could easily have been paid out of the current receipts from taxation.

Four millions is a very ample allowance to make for the value of all the permanent works left by Tammany in exchange for sixty-four millions of new permanent debt. Net result—sixty millions stolen, in addition to the sums filched out of assessments on property-owners and out of current taxation.

Of the above, about five millions of dollars were spent on wholly unnecessary public advertising, as a bribe to stop the mouth of the Press. Of this at least half a million went back into the pockets of the Ring through the medium of the Transcripts, of which TWEED, SWEENY, and others, were owners.

The same corrupt organization which is responsible for these things, appeals again, through a new set of leaders, for a fresh chance to get its hand into the local Treasury, its nominee into the Governor's chair, and its tools into the Legislature.

Let the citizens of New-York take a fresh look at their tax-papers, and then say whether they can afford to risk another three years of Tammany rule.

The Sixth Congressional District.

We know that Dr. ADOLPHE G. DUNN, the Republican candidate for Congress against JAMES BROOKS, is an able man, with qualifications for the office far above those of most candidates. He ought to be elected by a decided majority over his opponent, who has misrepresented the district for years. BROOKS owes his seat in Congress solely to Tammany. Personally he has neither fitness for the place nor popularity. Tammany sent him and has kept him there, and has received in acknowledgment the utmost subserviency on all occasions and in all ways. In the long fight with Tammany, neither BROOKS nor his paper helped the people a particle. On the contrary, the charges and proofs of corruption were studiously suppressed in the Express, and to this day have never been given to its readers. What Tammany found in BROOKS worth buying, it is hard to see. The price it paid in the Congressional nomination was, however, of little account to it, for to Tammany's immediate plans it mattered very little who was in Congress or who was out of it. We may be sure that the bargain was satisfactory to BROOKS, or he would not have closed it. Doubtless he has made it pay, and there have been lobbyists in Washington who might tell how. It is to be hoped, however, that the time has come when the election of a Congressman in this District is not controlled by Tammany. It is certain that the honest people there have a chance of choosing an excellent representative in Dr. DUNN. We trust they will improve it.

Tammany.

Whatever may be the result of the election in this City on Tuesday next, it is reasonably certain that the nominees of Tammany Hall will be the last and lowest in the race. It may also be safely predicted that this is the last election in which any respectable candidate for office will deem it essential to his success, or desirable for his reputation, to have the indorsement of that political organization. If there is any association, combination or thing in this country that ought above all things, to crave death and oblivion it is the "Order of St. Tammany." The very name of Tammany has become a stench in the nostrils of the whole American people. Any attempt to revive it, or "reform" it, or to perpetuate its existence in any shape, is the height of short-sightedness and folly. There is a strong inclination, we are aware, among some people, to prolong the life of a political party, organization, or name that has been great and powerful in the past. There were men who could not bear to see the old Whig Party lose its name and identity, and be heard of no more in the political arena. But they had the consolation of knowing that it had been a noble and a glorious party in its day, and that, if it had become palsied with too much conservatism in its old age, it would at least die full of honors, and leave behind it a bright and untarnished name.

Not so with Tammany. That organization has committed the unpardonable sin for which there is no reparation or atonement. It was never highly respectable, as the world goes; it was always rough, boisterous, and rowdyish—given to muscle and passion rather than to intellect and reason; but since it transferred its head-quarters to Fourteenth-street, it has made its new domicile a very den of thieves and robbers. The "fire-water" of the enchanter has been turned into the fire of political debauchery and crime. The new edifice has become a haunted house, uninhabitable for any man of association of men who dare to despise the finger of scorn. Its walls echo with perjuries and blasphemies and the execrating voices of highway robbers. Its cellars are full of blasted reputations, murdered characters, and dead politician's bones. Not all the money of corrupt railroad companies, nor all the forgiven of AUGUSTUS SCHELL, nor all the political craft of SAMUEL J. TILDEN will ever be able to restore the Wigwam to a respectable habitation, or make the name of Tammany anything but an object of loathing and curses with all honest people.

The last thing, and the only fit thing, that can be done with Tammany is to bequeath the name to posterity as a synonym for thievery and all forms of political rascality, and to transform the wigwam into a stable, or a circus for performances like that of the great "combination" which now has a renegade Republican for its figure-head.

The Coming Ox.

When, in the first days of the horse disease, it was proposed that oxen should be brought into the City to supply the place of the dead and dying horses, no one, probably, imagined that the proposal would be seriously adopted. Nevertheless, so great has been the interruption of business in consequence of the dearth of horses, that oxen have already made their appearance, chiefly in connection with market-wagons, while it is understood that large numbers of draymen have sent into the country in search of teams of oxen wherewith to resume their interrupted occupation. It is thus possible that, should the horse disease prevail for any length of time, the ox would become as familiar a feature of our streets as the horse has been; and it is by no means certain that he would not win as high a place in our respect and affection.

The ox is undoubtedly a slow and methodical beast. He lacks the fiery energy of the horse, and is ill-adapted to meet the views of the cabman or hearse driver of racing proclivities. The omnibus driver who wields the ox-goad instead of the horse-whip would find it difficult to instigate his team to the playful joke of carrying away the wheels of obnoxious carriages; and the wild butcher boy could not amuse himself with driving his two-wheeled ox-cart over the toes of near-sighted old gentlemen. The ox being, moreover, a proverbially sure-footed beast would fail to gratify that numerous part of the community whose apparent occupation it is to watch the struggles of horses who have fallen on the Broadway pavement. Certainly the ox would be a failure if he were expected to lend his aid to fast driving, or to any other recognized form of popular amusement. He has, however, certain well-understood virtues which might more than compensate for the shortcomings just imputed to him.

For example, he is the most placid and peaceful of beasts. Not even the malignant ingenuity of the small boy has yet devised a plan to irritate him into running away. Broadway might be crowded with the frequent ox, but the spectacle of a run-away team, now an every-day sight, would never be offered. The thoughtful ox, when tethered at the curbstone, and wrapt in meditation upon the meadows of his rural youth, might sometimes abstractedly lunch upon the brilliant skirt of a passing lady, or, dreamily tossing his huge head, hint his presence with unintentional horn to the lounging policeman; but in neither case would his conduct deserve indignant censure. His work would undoubtedly be performed with the utmost slowness and deliberation, but it would never be shirked under the weak pretense of "staggers," as is the reprehensible habit of the vicious horse, while his very slowness would recommend him to those express companies whose delight it is to delay as long as possible the delivery of trunks intrusted to their care. It is possible, too, that his habitual deliberation and persistent practice of wayside meditation might exert a wholesome influence upon our overworked business men, and lead them, by the force of example, into easier and healthier habits of life. The ox has undoubtedly been sadly unappreciated by our citizens, and inasmuch as to know him is to respect him, and to recognize his solid virtues may very possibly prove the first step to their imitation, it will perhaps be a substantial gain to the Metropolis should the ox take up his permanent residence among us.

MINOR TOPICS.

According to Mr. DICKENS, the counsels and instructions of a veteran criminal were necessary in order to make accomplished thieves of Fagin's youthful friends. In this City, the juvenile instinct for crime needs no instruction. The young New-York pickpocket would resent with scorn, the suggestion that he should enter a class such as Fagin had under his charge. He steals by the light of nature quite as skillfully as does the regularly-educated London thief. It should also be noticed, in comparing the efficiency of our juvenile criminal with that of the young thief of the British monarchy, that here, alone, has the small boy proved himself a capable and accomplished burglar. On Monday night, a burglar aged twelve, assisted by a confederate aged ten, broke open a store with the aid of a diminutive jimmy, and proceeded to confiscate property with much coolness and judgment. Let the despots of Europe point, if they can, to a similar instance of juvenile precocity among their down-trodden subjects.

Whenever a municipal election is at hand, the target companies appear in the story of red shirts and portable calcium lights. It is perfectly well understood that the majority of these associations are made up of the lowest class of Democratic politicians, banded together in order to "strike" candidates for money, under the pretext of having prizes for which to shoot. Of course it is to be expected that the target shooters will get drunk, and engage in riot and robbery, such being their only idea of rational enjoyment. To what extent the target company that visited Hamilton Park on Monday was responsible for the disorder and crime was followed in their wake is not clear. It may be true that the thieves who followed the company to the entrance of the Park, and subsequently beat and robbed every passer-by, were as obnoxious to the company as they were to

The Tribune is now publishing a series of attacks on Attorney-General BARLOW, which are said to be writing by DAVID DUDLEY FIELD. The Tribune has distinguished itself during this campaign by deliberately forging Speaker BLAINE's name to a document, by which it was made to appear that he had accepted bribes to an enormous amount; and it has also published numerous other libels, of almost equal atrocity, on other honorable men. The fact that these attacks upon Gen. BARLOW appear in such a sheet would alone render them undeserving of any attention. Moreover, the public, suspecting their author, fully comprehends their contemptible character. Gen. BARLOW need give himself no trouble to answer any pretended charges that either DAVID DUDLEY FIELD or the Tribune may bring against him.

Few people outside of Paris had any idea of the extent to which Minister WASHBURNE aided and protected Germans during the recent French and German war. From a statement recently made by him, it appears that he aided thirty thousand Germans to leave Paris and return to their native country, after the decree of the French Government driving all German residents out of the city. He subsequently protected three thousand destitute Germans, who had remained in the city during the perils and privations of the siege. More than this, he interposed and rescued from a violent death more than a hundred Germans who were arrested as spies by the Communists. A record such as this entitles Mr. WASHBURNE to the gratitude not only of the German race, but of all humane men, and it is pleasant to learn that Prince BISMARCK has warmly acknowledged the services of the fearless American Minister.

On Tuesday a gentleman was suddenly killed as he was passing a new building at the corner of Wall and Broad streets, by a large piece of timber, which fell from the roof and struck him on the head. That accidents like this do not occur daily in this City is a matter of wonder. When a new building is being raised, or an old one being repaired, no adequate protection is afforded to the public. Instead of putting a roofed gallery on the sidewalk, as is done in every European city, people are permitted to pass directly under heavy beams and blocks of stone suspended in the air, and are saved from death or maiming only by the strength of the rope in use, or the vigilance of the workmen. The latter are often inexcusably careless and reckless, and we shall probably have a series of accidents like that of yesterday, until builders are strictly compelled to carry on their work with more regard to human life.

The Yankee, especially he of the Connecticut variety, is unquestionably an extremely ingenious person, and has given to the world a large number of exceedingly useful inventions. His last effort is, perhaps, the most ingenious of all his inventions, though there may be some doubt as to its practical usefulness. The naked condition of our trees during the Winter months is by no means attractive, and it is, therefore, a benevolent idea of a particularly benevolent Connecticut person, to prevent the falling of leaves by the artificial warming of the trees. He asserts that a system of steam pipes twining among the roots of shade trees, and kept hot by steam from an ordinary furnace boiler, will have the effect of persuading the trees that the cold of December is merely a delusion, and that it would, therefore, be folly to lay aside their Summer foliage. It is not known that this plan has been tested by actual experiment, and it is possible that the average tree may decline to be deceived by the device of artificial warming.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Horace Greeley.

The wife of Mr. Horace Greeley died in this City yesterday morning, at the residence of Mr. Alvin J. Johnson, No. 833 West Fifty-seventh-street. The immediate cause of death was a very severe attack of lung disease, a complaint which had caused her much continued suffering for nearly twenty years. Mrs. Greeley's maiden name was Mary Young Cheney, and she was born at Litchfield, Conn., in the year 1811. Enjoying unusual educational advantages, Miss Cheney became a school-teacher of rare abilities. Becoming an ardent believer in the hygienic teachings of Dr. Graham, the famous dietist, she frequented the Graham House Hotel, in this City, and there made the acquaintance of her future husband. In the beginning of 1836 she accepted an engagement as teacher in Warrenton, N. C., and married Mr. Greeley at that place in July of the same year.

During her last illness, Mrs. Greeley was attended by Mr. Greeley and her two daughters, the Misses Ida and Gabrielle. From the first it was feared that the attack would have a fatal tendency, and her death was anticipated this week as inevitable, so that her friends were fully prepared to the worst. The funeral will take place in Dr. Chapin's Church, on Friday, at the hour of noon, and will be quite private. The body will be conveyed to Green-Wood and buried there in the modest vault which belongs to the family. Her loss will be deeply felt by her family and a large circle of friends.

AMUSEMENTS.

Musical.

ITALIAN OPERA—MME. LUCCA IN "LA FAVORITA."

A welcome change was made last night at the Academy by the production of Donizetti's "Favorita." The performances of opera have been a trifle ragged of late, and the representation named was the more acceptable for being smooth and correct, in an uncommon degree. The fire and dramatic force of Mme. Lucca's Leonora deserve all the strong praise they have received at competent hands abroad. It is certainly one of the lady's best characters. Her audience was with her last night from the outset. Twice called before the curtain at the end of the first act, the compliment was repeated again and again during the rest of the performance, and the enthusiasm thus indicated was assuredly spontaneous. Paris that call for depth of feeling, for the abandon of passionate emotion, are the ones perhaps best suited to Madame Lucca's abilities, excellent as she is in the homelier range that on the English stage would pertain to what we call the domestic drama. Her efforts on this hearing were strengthened by vocal conditions of an auspicious nature, and in all respects the impersonation of Leonore was thus made delightful to the crowded audience. Signor Abramoede was also in better voice than heretofore, and sang to the real satisfaction of his public. Certain passages have been rendered here to better advantage, no doubt, yet, on the whole, the gentleman's Fernando was an effort the symmetry and completeness of which deserve full recognition, and are not easily to be surpassed. The Alphonse of Signor Bellini was very creditable, and was hailed with no little applause; and the Balthazar of Signor Coulon was dignified and effective. The concerted pieces were given with considerable care, and altogether this performance of "La Favorita" was an advance on the majority of representations furnished by the present company. The opera will bear repetition, and we can conscientiously recommend the public to listen, in hearing it, to an entertainment of genuine merit, not on the part of the admirable artist centering the chief character alone, but in the surrounding and subordinate figures and accessories. Were all the work given by this troupe as praiseworthy as that of last night, criticism would have little to except to, and the manager and public would be equally well satisfied.

ABOUT CANDIDATES.

Look Out for Your Congressmen and Assemblymen.

Men Who Ought to be Left at Home.

Why They Should Remain in Retirement.

Candidates Who Ought to be Elected.

Remember, Election Day is a Legal Holiday.

Look Out for Your Congressmen and Assemblymen.

It is most important that men like James Brooks and De Witt C. Littlejohn should be shut out from the next Congress and State Legislature. Dr. Dunn is running against James Brooks, and can beat him if our Republican friends will do their duty. Mr. Fort is Littlejohn's antagonist, and is an honest man—which Littlejohn is not. The latter has always been a supple tool of Tammany—and has further distinguished himself by the basest treachery to all who have lent him a helping hand. If sent to the Assembly, Littlejohn will inevitably "sell out" his constituents whenever he gets a chance, and laugh at them afterward.

Husted and Alvord are also candidates for the Assembly, and ought to be sent home. Let us secure a good representative body, and not be saddled with the men who ruined all reform measures last session.

Michael Connolly, Another "Reformer."

The voters of the Ninth Congressional District can scarcely need to be told that Mike Connolly, "the Big Judge," in office and out, as a citizen and a judicial officer, has given his sympathy and countenance and association and aid to that class of the community who contemn law and make light of morals, and who have grown strong, if he is strong, by an aggregation of constituencies who sympathize with his groveling political views and actions. He has been intrusted with the duties of arraigning criminals. He has so exercised that function that the offender has not feared him, but the Policeman and the agent of the law has often felt the weight of his denunciation, and trembled under his threats. Ignorant himself to a degree that is amazing, he has reversed the maxim of the common law, that "ignorance excuseth no man," and translated it so that it reads in his vocabulary, "ignorance excuseth all manner of offenses." If the young population of this Congressional district desire to be represented by a person of such a grade, the opportunity presents itself this Fall.

John Hardy, a Candidate for Congress.

In response to the call of President Lincoln for troops to put down the rebellion, just then inaugurated by the first act—firing upon Sumter—the Governor of the State of New-York, Hon. E. D. Morgan, wrote a patriotic message recommending a compliance with the call. The Committee of the House of Assembly reported a bill, the provisions of which were intended to supply the quota of troops due from this State to the Federal Union. The bill was passed rapidly through the preliminary stages of legislation, and on the 15th of April, 1861, it became a law, by 100 Union votes to 6 Copperhead secession votes. The six votes in opposition to this patriotic measure were Cozans, Hardy, Kenny, Varian, Walsh and Young. And this Mr. John Hardy is the identical person who has enjoyed the confidence of Tammany, been their fostered pet in Municipal office, was conspicuous as a sympathizer in the riot of July, 1863—in fact, the emissary of the mob, and a spokesman in its interest. This Mr. John Hardy now appeals to the voters of the Ninth Congressional District to intrust him with high official functions in the same Government which, in 1861, he was not only unwilling to defend, but was not willing to have defended. Persons who, with this record before them, vote for Mr. John Hardy, will be subjected to the suspicion that their action is dictated by sympathetic approval of his extraordinary career.

New-York City Congressmen.

Dr. Dunn in the Sixth, John D. Lawson in the Eighth, D. B. Mellish in the Ninth, and Wm. A. Darling in the Tenth Congressional Districts are candidates that every honest man should vote for. Compare them with Fernando Wood, "Big Judge" Connolly, John Hardy, James Brooks, and it is difficult to see how the decent people of the City will be content to accept the latter rather than the former.

Election Day.

Do not forget that Tuesday next will be a legal holiday, and that the polls open at 6 A. M. and close at 4 P. M. It is important that every friend of reform should take the trouble to vote—every vote is of value to us. In the City, vote for all the candidates nominated by the Committee of Seventy.

Not Withdrawn.

Dr. Adolph G. Dunn, the Republican candidate for Congress in the Sixth District against James Brooks, has not withdrawn, as has been erroneously stated. Dr. Dunn proposes to remain a candidate, and he should be warmly supported on Tuesday by all who desire to see the Sixth District worthily represented in the next Congress.

The Third and Fourth Congressional Districts.

In the Third District, Gen. Woodford is as sure of an election as any man can be before the votes are polled; but his friends owe it to him and to the country to give him in Congress the help which only a strong constituency can give. He will make a useful and creditable member. In the Fourth District, Gen. Cooke ought to be elected. He is an upright man, in whom the people of Brooklyn have confidence. If the full vote is brought out, he will be returned.

Tardy Repentance.

The Tribune yesterday remarked that "the game of announcing people as speakers of political meetings on the strength of their having been invited to speak, and in defiance of the fact that they are known not to be in sympathy with the object of the meetings, is beginning again." So it appears that Mr. Cochrane's Committee has decided to return to the plan on which the first Greeley meeting in this City was announced, when, as will be remembered, Carl Schurz and other prominent Liberals, who never had any intention of being present, were announced as speakers. Indeed, the insanious Tribune frankly asserts that its advertising columns "give some striking illustrations of it"—meaning by "it" the "game" of falsely announcing people as speakers. In its column in question a long list of Liberal speakers is presented, numbers of whom have not the least intention of appearing at the meetings where the Tribune assures its readers they will speak.

The Professor at His Old Tricks Again.

To tell preposterous falsehoods and to then immediately proceed to show their falsity, is the latest folly of the Tribune. For example, it said on Wednesday that "when the notorious maladministration of the New-York Custom-house by his (Cornell's) and Tweed's favorite, Murphy, became remarkable to the merchants of New-York, not one President was forced to dismiss him—the only gift during an Administration proverbial for the shabbiest respect to public opinion—he not only allowed Murphy to name his successor, but insulted and defied the public by sending him, as soon before strongly approving his course."

It is untrue that Mr. Murphy was unendurable to the merchants of New-York, for the most eminent of them certified that under his administration the Custom-house had been managed better than it ever had been before. It is also untrue that Mr. Murphy was dismissed, the fact being that he resigned. When the Tribune goes on to say that the President publicly and strongly approved Mr. Murphy's course, it shows the falsity of the pretense that he was removed, and when it asserts that the President "removed" him out of "respect to public opinion," it outlines its charge that in so removing him the President "insulted and defied the public."

Sudden Resignation of the Tammany Judiciary Candidates.

It was generally conceded in political circles yesterday that the Tammany candidates for Judges of the Supreme and Superior Courts, City Judge, District-Attorney and Coroner would resign their nominations. A reporter of the TIMES called upon several of the nominees last night, but failed to learn anything definite. Judges Bedford and Leonard pronounced it untrue, though it is generally believed to be true by many.

Mass-Meeting to Ratify the Nomination of David B. Mellish for Congress.

Over 1,500 persons assembled, last night, in Neumann's Hall, No. 475 Ninth-avenue, to ratify the nomination for Congress of David B. Mellish. The enthusiasm exhibited throughout was unbounded. The President, Benjamin K. Phelps, Esq., occupied the chair, and delivered a stirring speech, during which he highly eulogized Mr. Mellish, and challenged any man to point out one stain in his record. Mr. Robert Sewell spoke of the services rendered the country by the Republican Party in freeing our millions of human beings. He said that the people could not so soon forget its record, and that Horace Greeley would be the worst defeated man who ever aspired for the Presidency.

Dr. Adolph G. Dunn spoke in German, urging his countrymen to vote the reform ticket nominated by Honest Men, and for the Republican, State, and National nominees. Col. B. T. Morgan and others followed in able speeches, after which the meeting dispersed, with cheers for all the Republican and Reform nominees.

Reception to Edmund Yates by the Punch Club, Brooklyn.

On Tuesday evening the members of the Punch Club, in Brooklyn, assembled in their handsome Club-house, on Remsen-street, to do honor to Mr. Edmund Yates, the English novelist and lecturer. Among those present were Hon. A. B. Chisendon, Hon. Stewart L. Woodford, Hon. A. S. Cox, Hon. J. M. Van Cott, Major General Slocum, Hon. J. S. T. Stranahan, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Rev. Father O'Reilly, Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, Rev. A. P. Putnam, Mr. Wm. Hart, and Mr. R. L. Edwards. Mr. Yates reached the Club-house about 10 o'clock, after having delivered his lecture on "Princes of the Pen." He was greeted with cheers, and recognized among the gentlemen present several whom he had met soon after his arrival here. Mr. Thos. Kinsella introduced Mr. Yates to the members of the Punch Club collectively, and then formally welcomed their guest in a neat speech as "Prince of and an Ambassador of the Prince of the Pen." Alluding to the injustice English authors suffer from American publishers, he said that "we have no international copyright to yielding to the feeling that we cannot longer afford to be dishonest in this particular, as we are to rich to literary pirates." Mr. Kinsella concluded with some pleasant allusions to the fairness of the Presidential campaign.

Mr. Yates replied in an exceedingly happy vein, alluding in complimentary terms to the oratory of the Presidents of the Club, and of Mr. Beecher. He had pondered over the name of the Club as having great possibilities for hidden meaning beyond the conventionalism, and it occurred to him that, from their manner of harmonizing, they had taken the name to recall the time upon earth when good-fellowship received another definition, and when men in their pristine youth and vigor. If such was the signification, and that the purpose, he invited their toasts to upon him. Hon. Mr. Cooper, Rev. Mr. Beecher, Rev. Dr. Talmage, Mr. Cox, Rev. Mr. Putnam, and Mr. Woodford were called upon to speak, and a series of short and witty speeches followed. Frequent references were made to the national facility in speech-making, and Mr. Woodford, in order to remove a misapprehension which might find lodgment in the mind of Mr. Yates, that an American could not avoid making a speech, said that we had found one who could, and at once made him President of the United States. (Applause and laughter.)

After a musical treat, contributed by some of the guests of the Italian Opera and some of the members of the Club, and the reading of letters of regret from several prominent gentlemen, the guest took his departure about midnight, and the pleasant and brilliant entertainment terminated.

CRUELTY ON WARD'S ISLAND.

Emanuel Smith, an Lunatic from His Treatment—An Inquest to be Held Today.

Lewis C. Samuels, a lunatic confined in the hospital of Ward's Island, died on the night of Monday last under painful and peculiar circumstances. The deceased is described in the books of the hospital as an Englishman, aged thirty-two years, and a commercial traveller by occupation. He entered the hospital on the 12th of August last, and enjoyed excellent physical health until within a week of his death, when he was seized with a severe attack of diarrhoea, which caused great prostration. However, on Saturday last, when Dr. Echeverria, who had attended him since his admittance to the hospital, visited him, he found that his physical condition had much improved, and that even his mental condition gave marked indications of a change for the better. On Sunday morning, at 6 A. M., the doctor again visited him, and found him utterly prostrated, his body being quite blue and chilled. The unfortunate man complained that his attendant, one McDonald, had, at 4 o'clock that morning, forced him into a cold bath, despite his energetic protests. The doctor asked McDonald with this act of cruelty, and he did not deny the charge. Stimulants were then given to the patient, and the attendant was severely reprimanded. On Monday morning Dr. Echeverria again visited his patient, and found him locked up in a small room. He observed the poor fellow's condition to be much worse, and again he heard complaints of the cruelty of the attendant McDonald. This time the lunatic charged his attendant with having beaten him severely on the knees, on the stomach, and in the face. On these portions of the man's body the doctor found marks and contusions which fully verified the patient's statement. On Monday night, at about 12 P. M. the sufferer expired, and the doctor when called in refused to give a certificate of death, but insisted upon holding a coroner's inquest. The man McDonald was immediately arrested and subsequently locked discharged for cruelty, and already has been before the Board of Commissioners charged with cruelly treating a patient named Cassidy. Yesterday Gen. Bowen, a member of the Commission, visited the Island, and heard the above details from Dr. Echeverria. An investigation will shortly take place in reference to this matter, and other abuses and irregularities which are of daily occurrence in the Lunatic Hospital of Ward's Island. Today Dr. Cushman, Deputy Coroner, will hold an inquest upon the body of Samuels in the hospital, where it now lies.

The Congressmen at Large.

Inasmuch as the Election law of 1872 for the City and County of New-York requires that all the officers to be voted for in which all the voters alike participate (except in certain cases designated) shall be upon one ballot, which shall be indorsed "General—Number Two," it is hereby mutually understood and recommended that the candidates for Representative in Congress at large be printed on the City and County of New-York upon the tickets indorsed "General—Number Two," and not upon the ballot indorsed "Congress," as in the other counties of the State.

Among the weeklies the Illustrated London News appears with some very fine pictures and a colored supplement of highly artistic finish. ### The Horse Epidemic.

Eighteen thousand sick horses in New-York—8,000 in Brooklyn—3,000 in Jersey City—boats and produce upon the canals at a stand-still—men carting merchandise through our cities—street railroads and omnibuses unable to move—the Government stopping the importation of horses from Canada—are a part of the evidences of the terror and loss already occasioned by this terrible disease, and its ravages seem to have just commenced.

The immediate treatment of the disease, both to restore horses already afflicted, and to prevent others from taking it is what every one desires to know.

While the air is surcharged with this endemic malaria animals must not be overworked. They must be fed soft food—like bran-mash, carrots, and salted hay—not allowed to drink cold water—must be well blanketted, kept warm and have plenty of clean bedding. Those which are sick, in addition to the above should be given warm flax-seed tea, Muriate of Ammonia, and Belladonna or Aconite, and Sweet Spirits of Nitre—the nostrils and eyes kept clean with a soft sponge well rinsed in warm water, and the windpipe, throat, chest, belly, and legs, bathed and wrapped in some penetrating emollient. And for this nothing seems to be so well adapted as Centaur Liniment. This article is very penetrating—is quickly absorbed by the system, and appears to act alike upon the glands, muscles, and lungs. It is a certain preventive, and superior to Opodeldoc, Turpentine, or Capsicum. Well horses treated as above will not take the disease in either of its three forms—Catarrhal—Rheumatic and Gastro-Erysipelatous, all termed Epizootic Influenza. Unless something be immediately and effectively done to avert this terrible malady, the national industries will be paralyzed, and a financial panic ensue.—Tribune.

St. Louis Custom-House and Government Building.

The bids for the stone contract for the Government edifice at St. Louis were opened Saturday, as was stated in a telegram, and the principal competitors were the owners of a stone from the Ohio River and those of the St. Genevieve sandstone quarry near St. Louis. The reports from St. Louis and other places where the St. Genevieve stone is largely used are unanimous as to its being the best sandstone deposit in the country, being uniform in texture and color, and of great durability. The bid for this stone was thirty per cent under its competitors, and would thus save the Government about $150,000, besides furnishing a stone equal, if not superior, to any in the country. We hope therefore, that it will be accepted.—Cleveland Herald.

Special Auction Sale of Sewing-Machines.

The Willcox & Gibbs Sewing-machine Company held their third special sale in New-York of double-thread sewing-machines yesterday, at No. 728 Broadway. Mr. Daniel Matthews selling. The goods offered comprised a very large collection of all the leading kinds of lock-stitch and other double-thread sewing-machines, which have been taken in exchange by the Company in New-York and vicinity during the past three months, as part payment for the Willcox & Gibbs machine. There were, of course, some of the best class of machines offered, the object of the sale being to dispose of the constantly growing accumulation of double-thread machines in the hands of the Willcox & Gibbs Company, by whom they continue to be received at a fraction of their original cost from persons who desire to exchange them for the Willcox & Gibbs machine.

The machines sold were over seven hundred in number, and occupied the entire first floor and basement of the extensive salesroom. They were arranged in convenient lots, and in most cases were sold separately, with the option to the purchaser of taking one of these machines in the lot at the price. The sale lasted two days, and comprised a very large number of Wheeler & Wilson, and also a good proportion of Singer, Grover & Baker, Howe, Wood, Florence, and other double-thread machines. The attendance was a very fine one, all the machines having the appearance of being in good condition, many being evidently almost new. They were in great use in the same condition as when sent out from the company.

The attendance at the sale was VERY large, comprising not only dealers, but to a considerable extent the public, this evidently affording a favorable opportunity to obtain good second-hand double-thread machines cheap. A large number of Wheeler & Wilson averaged from $5 to $10 to $20; Willcox, $5 to $7 to $8; Singer and Florence, differ; Howe and Simpson, $5 to $8; Dobbins, $8 to; Wood & Davis, $8 to $9; Grover & Baker, $5 to $15; Singer, $4 to $10, and others in proportion. A few choice machines, &c., remained without reserve.

The sale was only partially concluded yesterday, and will be resumed this (Thursday) morning, at 10.—Advertisement.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

BOUNDABOUT ROMANCE. THE LAND OF FACT AND FANCY. By Frank R. Stockton. New-York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co.

This is one of the best books for boys we have seen for a long time. Mr. Stockton has evidently taken to work to produce a volume, which, while pleasing small young people, the result is that every page is worth reading. The contents are exceedingly varied, and although the work is mainly intended for the young, it will be found quite capable of providing amusement for the leisure hours of others more advanced in life. We took it up for the purpose of glancing through its pages, and found that we were reading steadily on; and, in truth, the book is far more interesting than many of much greater pretensions. Mr. Stockton may be honestly congratulated on the execution of the task. He evidently knows how to engage the attention of the young. The illustrations are numerous and good, and altogether we scarcely expect to see a better book produced this Christmas, although to doubt we shall have many more showy ones.

THE RIVER PRINCE. By Louis Figuier. New-York: D. Appleton & Co. 1872.

M. Figuier is an industrious compiler, and he has now collected a great deal of information concerning the different races of mankind which inhabit the earth. He has drawn chiefly upon others for his facts, and we cannot say that in every case he has done well. But the book is well enough in its way, and may be read with interest by the general reader. The publishers have done wonders for it—the type and paper are both excellent, and the illustrations almost prodigal. There are eight fine chromo-lithographs, and 212 engravings on wood. The volume is, consequently, one of the most attractive recently issued by the Messrs. Appleton.

AGNES HOPETOUN'S SCHOOLS AND HOLIDAYS; OR, THE EXPERIENCES OF A LITTLE GIRL. By Mrs. Oliphant. Macmillan & Co. 1872.

A charming story for children. We need not remind our readers how well qualified Mrs. Oliphant is to relate a narrative which shall enchain the attention of young and old. This little volume is excellent in the moral it inculcates as well as in the incidents upon which it is based. It is a book which every mother would be glad to have her children read.

THE BATTLE OF THE GAUGES RENEWED. By Robert F. Fairlie. London: Effingham Wilson.

In reply to a review made by Hon. Silas Seymour, on the report of Gen. G. P. Bissell, Chief Engineer of the Texas Pacific Railroad, who advocated the adoption by that road of the three-foot six-inch gauge, Mr. Fairlie has written an exhaustive argument on the comparative merits of the broad and narrow gauges, favoring, of course, the latter side of the question. Mr. Fairlie has presented the many advantages possessed by the narrow-gauge roads with great earnestness and force. It is a subject upon which he is rightly enthusiastic, and thus it is not strange that he carries his conclusions further than others would care to do. Fully believing that on all short lines or long routes through sparsely-settled districts, the narrow-gauge road can be used to great advantage, we are forced to confess that even after reading Mr. Fairlie's able defense, we cannot admit that a three-foot gauge might be wisely substituted for those now employed by the Erie and Central Railroads. It would, indeed, be decidedly unfortunate to construct a transcontinental road on this principle. We are developing a system of passenger-car building very different from this theory of railroads. Our Pullman cars and the like are every day becoming larger and heavier; and with the desire for airy, comfortable accommodations on the main routes, passengers would find it difficult to be satisfied with the further confinement of person to which these roads would necessarily subject them. In all freight lines, such as the one now proposed by the Central Railroad, we should suppose that the change might be highly advantageous. As a treatise on the subject, Mr. Fairlie's work is a very thorough one, and we cordially recommend it to all interested persons.

CATALOGUE OF THE GRADUATES AND OFFICERS OF THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE UNIVERSITY OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK. July, 1872. Published by the Alumni Association.

This publication is the fruit of an excellent idea, and represents a praiseworthy effort to gather particulars concerning the large body of graduates—over 3,000 in number—who have gone into professional life from this Medical College since its foundation in 1841. The destruction of the records of the institution by the fire which destroyed the College building in 1866 has made the preparation of the work a task of great difficulty. The work is an octavo volume of 113 pages, and has been edited with care and ability by Dr. Charles Inslee Pardee, the present Secretary of the Association, and includes a list of the officers of the Alumni Association, the constitution, a history of the Medical Department of the University, a list of the officers of the College since its formation, the names of all the Alumni, and, so far as obtainable, their present addresses and professional records.

—The Young Folks' History of England. (Boston: Lee & Shepard.) A good and sensible compilation by Isa Craig-Knox. The facts are told in an interesting manner, although briefly—the events of the American war of Independence, for instance, being condensed into less than two pages. Brevity, however, is one of the aims of the book, and the author's general design has been successfully accomplished.

—The Prairie. (Appleton & Co.) Another volume in the new illustrated edition of Cooper's novels. Like the preceding ones, it is well illustrated, and will be popular with tourists and railway readers.

A CHURCH GIFT TO MR. W. W. CORCORAN.

From the Washington Republican, Oct. 20.

We understand that the Board of Trustees and Overseers of the Columbian College, in this city, determined at a recent meeting to take immediate steps for the increase of its permanent endowment. Mr. W. W. Corcoran is President of the Board, and has most strikingly evinced his interest in this movement by informing Dr. Welling, the President of the College, that he purposes to contribute with permanent funds the proceeds resulting from the sale of a very valuable tract of land belonging to him in the immediate vicinity of Washington. This tract of land, commonly known as "Trinidad," is situated on the eastern boundary of Washington, and embraces more than 180 acres. The spirit of improvement now taking such rapid strides south of the city will, we believe, this property, due to the fertility of its soil and other advantages, is estimated by competent judges to be worth not less than $250,000. The entire avails of this tract, when it shall be sold, will be generously turned over by Mr. Corcoran to the permanent endowment of the Columbian College.

France and Italy.

The policy of the Italian Government toward France is thus explained by the Ministerial paper, the Opinione: "If our clerical papers could be believed, we are on the eve of serious complications with France, and our relations with that Power are daily becoming more strained. This error proceeds from the circumstance that the Ultramontane and Legitimist papers, which think that these represent the opinions of all Frenchmen. But the very reverse is the truth. Thiers and his Ministers, with the majority of the Assembly, represent the majority in the Assembly at Versailles from venting their spite upon Italy. Whenever any difference of opinion arises between the French and Italian Governments, these Deputies busily fan the flame, and would be glad to kindle a war between the two countries. But Thiers has always silenced them, which he would never have been able to do if they had the French nation at their back. Even if all Frenchmen shared the feelings of the Ultramontanes and the Legitimists, Italy would not be obliged to alter her policy, for she has the other States of Europe on her side. At present it is chiefly on commercial questions that we do not agree with France; but England, Belgium, and Austria have exactly the same opinions on this subject as ours, and we, her we join these Powers in a common understanding of sentiment with France about protection; would it not be better to deal PEACEFULLY with the Ultramontanes and Legitimists attack us in the most violent manner, on account of the law on Religious Corporations? But the Italians know how to distinguish internal from international questions, and have good reason for not interfering in the affairs of other States. If France has any claims to make with regard to Roman institutions which she has founded, they will be examined and duly allowed. But, if she wishes, she is free to do with her Church what any other country. But in this matter also a peaceful arrangement will be arrived at. The Ultramontanes and Legitimists will not have the satisfaction of setting France and Italy by the ears. We do not fear, we either now or in future, a war. They fancy, which, if they provoke a war, would have all the other Powers against it. Not only do we not desire a war with France, but we strive to maintain the most friendly relations with her; and we have here the Liberal Italian Deputies, on the one hand, not to make France responsible for the language of the Ultramontanes and Legitimists, while, on the other we protest against the provoking language used toward France by our clericals."

NEWPORT.

The Chevalier de Tornay, Monumental Slab at "Old Trinity."

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEWPORT, R. I., Saturday, Oct. 26, 1872.

Our numerous Summer visitors in New-York will no doubt be pleased as well as interested, and especially that portion of them who are accustomed to worship at "Old Trinity Church," to learn the following: The monumental slab erected to the memory of Chevalier de Tornay, who died in this city soon after his arrival, and who was buried with imposing military honors, has been removed. This slab has remained in the churchyard for nearly a century, but during the present week it has been taken up and placed in the vestibule on the west side of the church. This step has been taken by the church society at the solicitation and expense of the Marquis de Noailles, the French Minister, who has resided here during the past season. A neat but substantial block of granite, suitably inscribed, will mark his last resting-place in the burial-yard of the church.

Chevalier de Tornay arrived in this city on the 10th day of August, 1780, in command of a French fleet of seven ships and five frigates, with a large number of transports and an army of 6,000 troops, under the command of Count de Rochambeau. J. G.

RELIGION IN FRANCE.

Views of M. de Pressensé.

In the meeting of the Congregational Union, at Nottingham, on Oct. 11, Dr. Pressensé delivered an admirable address, in the French language, on "The State of Religion in France." It was afterward translated to the meeting by Rev. R. Ashton, Jr. In considering, said Dr. Pressensé, the state of religion in France, he should have to leave our all reference to politics. The wounds of his bleeding country needed probing with a more delicate hand. He was compelled to say that Protestantism, as a State religion, had not honored religion generally in the eyes of his countrymen by recent events. The state of things might be thus described: The dominant religion was growing more and more hostile to liberty, and, as a natural consequence, liberty was becoming more and more irreligious. But the predominance of Romanism should not be looked on as a fatality of their race. Let them not forget the glorious French Reformation. It was, in the century which might be termed the century of the Reformation, or the partial reformation of the seventeenth century in connection with Pascal and the Port Royal. If that last movement had not been crushed, France would not now be where she is. But France rejected both reformations. Matters were worse, and on the 18th of July, 1870, the country appeared to consummate its disloyalty in the acceptance of the dogma of Infallibility. Before that time there was a liberal party in the Church of Rome in France, but this party, recorded as a whole, had bowed its head to the idol of the Vatican. Romanism was descending lower and lower, and was trying to prevent the country from accepting true liberty; while, on the other hand, it was drawing crowds to the Salette and Lourdes, by declaring that their minds were fascinated by miracles. In the meantime, as he had said, democracy was increasingly forsaking religion, which is confounded with Romanism. The people in the large towns were skeptical, and their irreligion would naturally lead to tyranny. In consequence of the Christmas they had seen what political atheism was. In the schools and the learned classes they had a cultivated infidelity. They had M. Renan and others, and this polished skepticism had descended to the streets, and they had seen it roaring in wine shops and in the streets. But between these two extremes there was a large number of religious souls in France waiting for better times, which might not be long delayed. But what were their duties? First, they should be men of true liberty. He ought to say that the election of secretaries was not the religion of Christ. Moreover, friends of Christianity everywhere ought to rejoice with them that the late despotism of twenty years had fallen. Some said that regime helped material prosperity, but they should remember how under it the morals of the nation had sunk and been tainted. What was being done in Prussia by the Government they could not approve. It was against liberty and against their religious principles. He had no sympathy with Jesuitism, but not that was the proper weapon with which to fight against them. Decided measures, however, was being made in France. The Budget of Public Worship voted by the National Assembly was being increasingly condemned. Twenty years ago such a hope would have been thought absurd, but if the possibility lasted for twenty years longer they would see the vote for that Budget done away. Let him also mention that at the recent Synod they had held in Paris a resolution was passed in favor of the separation of Church and State. That separation, when it came, would be the regeneration of the churches and help a revival of true religion. Then, after what he had heard recently at Cologne—and no nobler words had been heard there since Luther—he hoped those noble principles would find an echo in France. Meanwhile, they should look on the cross as the heaven hid in the tomb. The first duty was to preach Christ, to help on what had been called the "inner mission." In France they were a minority, but they represented a great principle; and they were increasingly trying to do their duty. He had found in the Vale of Cowley, in a mission they were founding in New-Caledonia, among the Communists there, also by labors among the workmen of Paris, and by a college they hoped shortly to establish there. Above all, let them not despair of God has already caused the plow over the soil. As in the case of the prophet Elijah, they had heard the Divine voice speaking to them in the whirlwind of fire; but He was now speaking to them in gentler tones, coming to say to them, "Rise and be comforted." God had strengthened so every one because he had great designs in the future for France.

New Site for Trinity College Decided Upon.

From the Hartford Courant, Oct. 22.

We understand that the trustees of Trinity College have leased the site for the new College buildings, and that they have agreed to purchase of Mr. Pendell the grounds known as the "Bacon farm," containing about forty acres, and extending from Park and Zion to Putnam-street. The property fronts 1,200 feet on Park and about 1,700 feet on Putnam-street, with a northerly boundary adjoining the grounds of the West Sewing-machine Company, and westerly to the Park River. No more judicious selection could possibly have been made. It is really a delightful spot. Park River curves gracefully around its north-western and western boundaries, and a fine grove of natural forest-trees covers acres of the river's bank, making it a lovely part, that seems in its natural beauty, hardly the touch of an hour ago. The price to be paid for the property has not as yet been made public, but the site has from the first been favored by a majority of the trustees, among them Messrs. English and Sheffield, of New-Haven, who, it is said, voted to sell the college grounds should a purchaser for the new site.

Death of a Wealthy Laborer.

From the Terre Haute (Ind.) Gazette, Oct. 14.

Saturday afternoon, Rev. James Hill, of Ashbury M. E. Church, was summoned to the death-bed of one of the rolling-mill hands as a bearding-house near the mill-works. Reaching the house, Mr. Hill found the sick man suffering from typhoid fever and flux, and soon saw that the poor man was at long last in the world. The kind-hearted gentleman did all he could to spiritually comfort the sickened, who proved to be a Welshman named Thomas Evans, of Pittsburg, but he was nigh unto death's door, and was rapidly declining. Last night he breathed his last, leaving a wife and a number of little sick children, and who were his friends in health opened his trunk, to their surprise found unmistakable evidence of the wealth of the deceased, being not less than $50,000, consisting of bank accounts, money loaned on securities of various kinds, and farming lands. Evidences were also found that led to the belief that he has a wife in Pittsburg, Penn., from whom he has been separated for some time, whether legally or not, is yet a mystery. The history of the life of the deceased is one of mystery, he being worth an ample competency, and a common day laborer is a business that can but be very laborious. His hands were blackened and hardened, showing beyond a doubt that he had long been engaged in this avocation. He could not have been more than thirty-five years of age, from the best we can learn.

THE FAR WEST.

Picturesque Description of Scenery in Minnesota.

A Novel Undertaking—Near the Mouth of Pelican River, Friday, Sept. 20, 1872.

The wonderful beauty of the lakes and river scenery of Minnesota is not hence illustrated than here in Otter Tail County, a section which abuts on the Northern Pacific Railroad, and the new road now in process of construction between that road and the St. Paul and Pacific, lower down in the State.

Otter Tail Lake is a beautiful sheet of water, with sandy borders and shores; is some ten miles long by six in breadth, abounding in fish and wild fowl, and it is picturesque and beautiful beyond conception. No wonder, therefore, that the region around is attracting numbers of settlers, who, in possession of fertile lands, sons and themselves blessed with an independence. Indeed, to bring the matter more home to us of the engineering camp, one of the communest illustrations of the success of the new settlers may be found in the person and family of the farmer nearest to our camp today, a sturdy, sensible man, who has extended various little courtesies and accommodations to us out of his now abundant resources as a successful frontier agriculturist. Fortunate as we have been in pitching our tents near the spring which supplies his family, his large garden has furnished us some of the finest vegetables one ever sees anywhere; while the clear river in front, giving us for the past day or two plentiful supplies of fine fish, pike, bass and bull-pout, added to the contributions of the hunters, has enabled our capable commissary to really set a bountiful and desirable table, such as is seldom excelled under similar circumstances.

The case of our friend, the settler alluded to, is one of thousands. Three years ago he was the denizen of a small town, and only making a scanty living there for himself and a young and growing family. Rent, however, provisions to be purchased so regularly absorbed all his earnings, that he finally determined to strike out and see if he could not better the condition of his finances and his household. In company with a brother-in-law, the start was made promptly; and after many weeks spent at "prospecting," the two depending mostly upon their guns and fishing-lines for subsistence, they came upon this pleasant, and choice locality, and which at last furnished them with good homes, and in three years by dint of hard labor, with a small house, 250 acres of rich land, wood and water plenty, and altogether the horses, land, cattle, &c., he is worth several thousand dollars.

One is frequently struck out here with a spirit of enterprise seldom witnessed elsewhere. As the crossing of the Otter Tail River by the Northern Pacific one hundred miles from, a few weeks ago, a steam saw-mill in full operation, when the proprietor had not even time to roof in, but which, notwithstanding its crude look and surroundings, was doing a roaring business, evidenced by the great piles of lumber it was turning out, and the large quantities of saw-logs which were afloat near, by waiting to be cut up. On all sides are seen similar quick movements and valuable results, growing out of the great rush of settlers and the needful means for providing them with shelter and a good start.

An engineering camp, out here presents not only good points of observation, but a good many attractions besides, to one who desires a sojourn temporarily in the wilds; because, aiming at certain points as yet in the line of no beaten track, or "trail," the men of the "transit" lead us across forests, rivers or plains, or by the margin of the beautiful lakes, with the sure comfort of a reasonably good shelter at night. A camp of ten men must have transportation for their luggage, a proper commissariat, &c., &c.; and when the labors of the day are over, and we are seated around the camp-fire, one is sure to find, even in that small circle of pioneers engaged in laying out a pathway for the iron horse, men who have experienced almost every vicissitude, as will travel over all the continent—from the scenes of their current labors even, to the shores of the Pacific and to Puget Sound.

Speaking of the comforts of this particular camp, all hands are constantly congratulating themselves, in the presence of a certain devoted camp-follower—one "Sookey"—about the best and prettiest Durham that ever dispensed lacteal luxury. Sookey is a character; and old Levi, the camp caterer, who most affectionately attends on her, is another, and the two are a decided study for any philosopher who may wish to speculate upon the nature and scope of queer attachments. Whenever the encampment is broken up, the cow takes up the line of march behind the lea wagon, laden with tents and other camp equipage; and the other day, although she made a tramp of twenty-one miles, occasionally taking a mouthful of grass, she was astonishingly fresh at the journey's end, and at night gave her usual tribute of a bucketful of milk, to the delight of all present. The fun of it was, that if old Levi fell behind on the march, she went back, lowing and bellowing, to find him, and looked satisfied to an amusing degree, when she could trudge alongside of him again. Let me add that her place at meal times is most commonly around our open-air table, where, with her nose most complacently pushed in between the shoulders of some two of us she can have, occasionally, a biscuit, piece of bread, or a potato handed back to her, thus making her a participant in the feast to which she had contributed. This shows what gentle treatment, even from rough frontiersmen, will effect upon animals, and should be worthy of reflection even to those more fortunately situated.

I have spoken of the Otter Tail Lake as one of the most beautiful and attractive, even of the many lakes of this delightful region. Top travel, moving in a south-west course down the Otter Tail River, finds that after a while it becomes the Red River; and in this section is a slow, beautiful, sweet stream, which coming, as it does, from huge and permanent reservoirs, entirely over which no much rise or fall, the first place of note on its banks being a new town hardly three years old, called Fergus Falls, from the name of the cascade, or falls, at that point. The town lies upon both sides of the river, a substantial bridge joining it together, and here we find a pretty church, several stores, hotels, a huge saw, lath, and shingle mill, a grist and merchant mill, bank, Post-office, land office, &c., similar to older towns. Indeed, favored with the two great and manifest advantages of rich lands and a splendid, never-failing, and equable water-power, perfectly controllable within high banks, its prosperity and growth appear already assured, and make it one of the most promising places in the whole State.

One of these sometimes, which becomes at times almost a perfect illusion in the Otter Tail region, is the appearance it bears of an old and settled country, like parts of England or Belgium, the presence of costly mansions being all that is necessary to make one feel that it has been settled for centuries; and one almost expects, at times, as we mounts some of these charming emerald slopes, with their rounded summits and graceful curves, to come upon a stately villa sitting to the crown. So remarkable is this feeling, or half-way illusion, that it actually crowns the feeling of loneliness.

Breaking up our encampment, and taking a south-westerly course toward Dakota and Breckenridge, distant from the Otter Tail crossing below the mouth of Pelican about twenty-one miles, we find the country a rolling prairie for the first ten miles or so, reaching finally jammed a dead level of green plain, as we strike the famous "Red River bottoms." Here at Breckenridge, the Bois de Sioux River joins the Red River, Lake Traverse being the source of the former; and the two combined, joined from point to point by the Pelican, the Buffalo, the Big Maple, Cheyenne and other streams, finally makes the "Red River of the North" navigable for steamers from the Northern Pacific crossing up into the British possessions.

As, mounted on a steam steamer, we proceed over the pitching waters of the encampment, we [illegible] abundance, and are constantly favored with [illegible] at home of them), the whole particularly rising in clouds from the small lakes scattered along the way. At one place we came upon the fresh tracks of an elk, where she had vaulted up and down a dry creek; but the animal did not make its appearance. All along the route are scattered attractive in the great granite boulders which go to establish the glacial theory, and prove that the country has been long time in the far past a vast lake; the traveler having that idea fixed upon his mind over and over again by the character of the soil and other indications.

Breckenridge, the present terminus of the St. Paul and Pacific Road, appears to be quite a thriving place; for, besides its own population, are that arrives and accompanies of Indians and half-breeds from Fort Garry and other points, with their furs. We see here, too, trains laden with lumber, shingles and various supplies for the frontier forts; these telling the story of how essential this road has become to the uses of the Government, and to the progress making in settling up the country still farther West. At this point, also, we see that the Red River has that peculiar color which distinguishes it for the repeat its course northwardly; and its current is rapid, too, indicating the young navigation between this portage and Lake Winnipeg.

Here we were greatly amused witnessing a half-breed attempt to save the twenty-five cent ferriage for a team across the river, by making his small nag half wade, half swim, in the endeavor to lead it. The bed of the river appeared to give him a firm footing enough, but when he sought to get up the muddy bank he was terribly "mired," and had great difficulty, evenly aid of his associates, in getting the concern to firm ground, breaking one of the runners near in doing so. He grunted his dissatisfaction loudly at the conclusion; but the experiment served to show us, that the river was, in some sort, fordable at this point.

Coming back toward St. Paul from Breckenridge, the distance between the twopoints being a little over two hundred miles, one finds for a world distance from the last-named place the Buffalo River, Glyndon, Comstock, Campbell and Barnesville, Hawley, Moorhead, Red River bottoms; and also a scarcity of timber, which would almost indefinitely retard progress and settlement, but for the agency of the potent instrumentality in modern advancement—the railroad. Sixteen miles westward Campbell station, the station opposite by stage-line for Fergus Falls and the Otter Tail settlements; and go along in this quarter the Pomona Road will somewhere strike the St. Paul and Pacific, the spaces between will ultimately be filled up. Further down still, we find Moorhead, of little lakes (grass, sloughs), the surface of the country, the scene in them black with dupes and grass, and more and more the signs of industry and thrift manifesting themselves, as great wheat fields spread out their rich treasures to the sun, the grain now being in the shock or stack and awaiting the visit of the thresher, which will give it its market value. Moorhead is the center of lines. It is a glorious exhibit indeed, and shows—in connection with the busy and large towns springing up on the line of the road—that railroads need wait no longer for business to be being constructed, but that they create it.

The Roman Catholic Clergy on Human Liberty.

From the New-York Tribune, Nov. 19, 1864.

The Tablet dissents from some portion of our recent strictures on the attitude and teachings of the Roman Catholic clergy in our country, touching the slaveholders' rebellion and its causes—dissents more especially to our remark, that the influence of said clergy coincides with that of the gross shops, in keeping our Irish-born population in an attitude of sympathy and virtual co-operation with the slave power, now struggling desperately to destroy our Union. We do not understand the Tablet to deny the substantial truth of our assertion, but rather to dissent from our grouping as disrespectful and irreverent. But the truth is always to be spoken when anything is, and it seems to us that this substantial accord between the clergy of one of our most numerous bodies of Christians and the leaders, almost without exception, of a great rebellion against human and moral rights, properly challenges investigation and reflection. Why should the great body of the clergy of any Christian denomination be of one mind in politics with the leaders and frequenters of the haunts of vice and infamy? This is not the "myth" of a Protestant, these seemingly incongruous classes in political fellowship! Here is a grave fact. The priests of a great and venerable Church, and the keepers of the dance-houses of Water-street and the rum-holes of Corlear's Hook, Mackerelville, and the Five Points, are practically agreed, with scarcely an individual exception, the same candidates in our recent election. What purpose, what impulse, what sympathy have they in common? Who will give us the true reason of their accord?

Does any dare say that they are alike opposed to our meddling with what is none of their (or our) business? Then let us shift the scene, and see how your explanation adapts itself to the reversing parallax.

The City of New-Orleans, now nearly a century and a half old, was originally settled by Roman Catholics, who have always been its most numerous and wealthy denomination. It is the residence of an Archbishop, with a numerous and influential clergy. That city was very early, if not at its foundation, graced with the presence of the Inquisition, from France to Spain, in 1763, of its 3,190 inhabitants, no less than 1,335 were slaves. In 1860, its population had increased to 168,675, whereof barely 18,350 were slaves. But New-Orleans had now become the greatest slave mart on earth. Having its entire prosperity not concentrated, and the focus of the harmest and most exacting system of slave-working ever known in a Christian, while far cruelier than was ever tolerated in a Mohammedan country. In that City of New-Orleans, under the shadow of a Roman Catholic Cathedral, with its priests and Bishop, and its clergy were constantly and publicly perpetrated by wholesale at barracoons and slave auctions, in the way of handling, stripping and selling women and female children, who often commanded enormous prices, notoriously for the gratification of the most revolting lust.

At these auctions husbands were sold away from wives, mothers from their young children, not occasionally, but by wholesale and almost daily, for scores of years. Many of the victims as well as many of the perpetrators were Roman Catholics; yet, notwithstanding that the Catholic Church propounds and maintains the most rigorous and salutary doctrines with regard to the sanctity and indissolubility of marriage, we have never heard of a protest by any Archbishop of New-Orleans against these slave auctions which were the wonder of Christendom. That Catholic women and girls were sold by hundreds to libertines for the most infamous purposes has never, within our knowledge, evoked even a spirited remonstrance from the Archiepiscopal champions at New-Orleans of the Immaculate Conception.

Nay, more. Today, Louisiana has rival Governors and Governments, one of them located in New-Orleans and based on the right of all men and women to freedom, the other somewhere in the north-western quarter of the State, and fighting to destroy the Union in the interest and for the perpetuation of negro slavery. And today the Archbishop of New-Orleans and all (or nearly all) his clergy are the ardent, active, utterly obdurate partisans and champions of the rebel, traitorous, pro-slavery Government of Louisiana and the relentless foes of its free rival. In other words, they are doing their utmost to restore at New-Orleans the crimes, infamies, and abominations of the system of divorce at the dictate of a master's caprice, lust, avarice, and of rape, enforced concubinage, and bestiality, which has been banished from that city by the triumph of Union arms.

Now, if there were anything in the ordinances, the inculcations, or the traditions of the Catholic Church universal that required this, we could understand, though we could not approve, such a step; but the Church seems to be emphatically otherwise than this. The "antipathy of race," so often cited to justify Irish persecution of "niggers," is utterly unknown at Rome, where a negro bishop presided ere Rome received its second pontiff, and where a white man, a native of Rome, the most memorable Papal bull issued in our time—that of Pope Gregory, XVI.—condemns and denounces slavery as inhuman and anchristian. So Bishop Dupanloup and other eminent Catholics of our day are ardent controversers of slavery; while Augustin Cochin was recently delighted by the Pope for his admirably convincing treatise, showing the beneficial results of West India emancipation. We cannot recall the name of a single eminent Catholic in Europe who is an avowed or advocate of slavery. Will any one explain to us the proslavery attitude of the Catholic clergy in this country?

Movement of Coal from Pittsburg.

From the Cincinnati Gazette, Oct. 24.

The amount of coal that left Pittsburg yesterday on the present rise was 8,000,000 bushels, with forty-two tow-boats, of which 3,128,000 bushels are to stop at Cincinnati, the remainder going below. There are forty-four tow-boats still remaining at Pittsburg, and, as there are 14,000,000 bushels of coal waiting for a rise, it will be seen the boats will have all they can bring on a single trip, and a good deal more. The largest amount of coal ever brought down on a single rise was a little over 8,000,000 bushels. The amount started on a single day of the present rise is only 3,000,000 bushels less than carried all the day of the big river last spring. Our reports last night showed that it was still raining in the Allegheny and Monongahela regions, and boats might have rising. A rise is thus assured, and while all the coal now loaded on barges at Pittsburg is no doubt safe, a

OUR ART SCHOOLS.

[illegible] convinced of the great need of a [illegible] conviction among all classes of citizens that [illegible] in the natural course of events; that public spirit was simply an early phase of the life of nations; which in maturity, may succeeded by private interest. It is in midst of these the circulus the champion arose, and the battle was fought and won, so that we now [illegible] to the things of which he is capable of judging. It is strange, but nevertheless true, that even in this twenty-first, before the champion had thrown his glove into the face of the giant in the cause of Industry, New-York was blessed with an unusual number of far-seeing broad-viewed men who, in comparative obscurity, were occupied in planning for the future greatness of the City. The historian who, in the year of grace 1872, traces the annals of the land will recur again and again with ever increasing admiration to this very epoch as specially the parent of the prosperity that shall time to. As the present takes rate the past before the sense, the dull forms of unknown men separate themselves from the obscure crowd, brighten with strange tints, and loom into the foreground with gigantic proportions. They are evidently the great men of their time. But those who were thought great by their contemporaries, dwindle and sink into stature not to be distinguished from that general mass of mediocrity which gives nothing to posterity save the vantage ground of standing on its [illegible].

To so into the unity assembe for the future, the great reformation of principles, the permanent of more reforms, the building up of the industrial and fine of artistic industries will furnish some day employment for many eloquent pens. The present sketch will be confined to the formation of those Art Schools by means of which artistic industries are being developed to a degree almost without our knowledge. Of these there are but two, the Academy of Design and the Cooper Institute; though the day will come when the Metropolitan Museum of Art will be more important than either. Meanwhile, their usefulness is restricted in purely artistic sense. this sketch must be confined to the schools of the Cooper Institute, designed specially for the development of those industrial pursuits, which are controlled by art, and whose prosperity depends entirely on the excellence of the art applied to them. Among these are wood-carving, furniture-making, porcelain and earthenware manufactures, gas fixtures, architectural ornamentation, jewelry, engraving, photography, working in gold and silver plate, and others less important. When good Peter Cooper, in April 1859, made the public presentation of this Institute to the Country, almost all articles of the above-named industries were imported. At the present hour we have made in some of them immense progress, and in others we have at least attempted something. Twenty years from this time we shall be fairly abreast in all of them, with the foremost nations of civilization. For in these schools eight hundred boys and men, already engaged in these very pursuits, are nightly taught those transcendent laws of beauty whose realization has given to France, to Italy, to Germany, and to England their supremacy. The pupils it must be confessed are mainly of foreign extraction, the great majority being German, but they are true citizens, and we have all the benefit of their inherited aptitude developed to its highest pitch by favorable surrounding conditions.

The Art Schools of the Cooper Institute comprise the Female Schools of Design in the day time, and the Night Schools for Males. In the first the circumstances are altogether different from the second, and therefore all the arrangements are different, for it is primarily the object of the institution to benefit the pupils as much as possible, and as soon as possible to enable them to reap a positive pecuniary profit from their instruction. The males who attend the night schools are all employed in the day time, therefore their pecuniaries is at night. They are employed in certain industries, therefore they are taught exactly what will profit them in their own line. The ladies, of the contrary, have no occupation, and so they are instructed in the day time. For those who have employment, an exceptional class is formed, attended by one section on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and by the other, Wednesdays and Fridays, thus giving them four days in the week in earn money for their support. But the great majority of the ladies are those who are learning an occupation, and who, accordingly desire to devoting all their time to study, to learn as quick as possible. There are not many ways in which women can find artistic employment. The chief are teaching, drawing, photography and engraving. To these things the present Principal, Mrs. Susan N. Carter, devotes special attention. In the first, naturally, a good knowledge of elementary drawing is nearly all that is requisite, and this can be acquired thoroughly in one year in the Institute, that is, from October to May. Those, therefore, who desire to teach drawing are permitted to devote themselves specially to the elementary branch, which, to tell the truth, stops short of the most valuable instruction that the Institute affords. The branching of place is naturally from the elementary. The pupil can elect to go to photography, taught most thoroughly by Carl Hecker, or she can advance higher in the true art direction, and be taught drawing from antique casts, by Signor F. Venino, or she can learn wood-engraving from a most admirable instructor, Miss Charlotte B. Cogswell, who has turned out some first-class designers from her sleeve. Among them is notably Miss Curtis, engaged by Ticknor & Fields, as an illustrator, at a high salary. Many of the most charming designs in One Young Folks are from her pencil. But this requires a special aptitude, and out of the 185 pupils at present studying, only a small proportion go to Miss Cogswell. Photography is a very lucrative occupation, and is chosen by at least one half, the remainder go through the legitimate art course and prepare themselves for the schools of the Academy of Design, the natural succursal of an art training.

He who desires to visit the Female School of Design can do so on Friday, when it is open to the public from 11 o'clock until 1 P. M. He will find it on the floor above the reading-room. The pupils come at 9 o' clock, with the exception of those who live at a distance, many pupils coming daily from points twenty and thirty miles away. There are, indeed, two young ladies who come from Stamford, Conn., and are most regular attendants, never missing a day. The lesson, it is may be so formed, ends at 1 o'clock, P. M., but the pupils have the privilege of staying until 4 o'clock to draw without instruction for the sake of practice. The locale of the classes is peculiar from being above the reading-room, whose great height materially cripples the space awarded to the pupils, which are arranged in long rows of desks, with aisles between for practicing. In the first Ave are the pupils learning elementary drawing, taught by the Principal, Mrs. Carter, a very accomplished woman. Copying from a flat surface is absolutely tabooed, every beginner having to commence in the true artistic way, from objects cast in plaster. These are of the most varied forms, from simple cones and cylinders up to bunches of grapes, apples with leaves, and things which present numerous curves and difficult shading. When a pupil thinks she can conquer greater difficulties she advances to the antiques, under Signor Venino. Miss Carter, who is to all these girls like a dear sister, never makes any objections even if the pupil mistakes the extent of her progress. She asks her if she is sure she can do the work in the next department, the result being, nine times out of ten, that the pupil is sent back by Signor Venino to the first Ave. The antiques are of the human body. The former Principal, Miss Childs, was came straight from the South Kensington Museum, failed to get the affectionate esteem of her pupils in this way, and was consequently a steaming block to artistic progress, driving away some girls who certainly would have honored the Institute. She was determined advocate of point shading, and would not allow any stump shading at all. The present instructor shows her pupils that in elementary drawing a clean, good line outline is the great point, and that, as to point and stump shading, sometimes one and sometimes the other can be used with greater advantage. It is a pleasant thing to see her bending over a bright young girl copying an acanthus leaf, or an intricate piece of German or French scroll work, pointing out the spirit and meaning of the curves, and how these designs could be and are employed in [illegible] work. The next classes are "[illegible]," but here the casts are removed, and the whole forms, one [illegible] at different angles. Here will be a group of [illegible] Venus de Milo, [illegible] Apollo Belvedere, [illegible] Hercules, [illegible] Antinous, [illegible] Venus de Medici, [illegible] Venus de Medici, [illegible] Venus de Medici

THE BUILDERS OF THIS ROAD CONTROL ENOUGH OF THE LEADING LINES RUNNING FROM CHICAGO TO INSURE AN ENORMOUS BUSINESS FROM THE START. TAKING INTO CONSIDERATION THE IMPORTANT FACT, PATENT TO ALL WHO STUDY THE STATISTICS OF TRADE, THAT THE PRESENT TRUNK LINES, NOW TAXED TO THEIR UTMOST CAPACITY, ARE NOT AFFORDING FACILITIES EQUAL TO THE GREAT AND CONSTANTLY-INCREASING DEMAND FOR TRANSPORTATION, AND THAT THIS ROAD, THROUGH ITS ENTIRE LENGTH, BEING PRACTICALLY STRAIGHT AND LEVEL AND SHORTER BY THIRTY-FIVE MILES THAN BY ANY OTHER NOW BUILT, OR THAT CAN BE BUILT, it must be apparent that this line is not only needed, but must be a great success. This Road, which passes through some of the richest Agricultural Counties in the State, and is on the most direct line between the Great Lakes and deep water navigation on the Hudson River, is now fast approaching completion, and will establish a new line of communication to Lake Ontario and the Great West.

The 78 miles of road now in operation and which are usually well built, are already paying net earnings equivalent to 7 Per Cent. Gold on cost of construction and equipment. The Bonds are now offered for sale at 90, with accrued interest, and we earnestly recommend them to our friends and investors as a safe and desirable security.

GENERAL TELEGRAMS.

A GALA NIGHT IN BOSTON.

Grand Republican Torch-Light Procession—The Entire City Illuminated—Fifteen Thousand Men in the Ranks.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 30.—The campaign in Massachusetts was virtually closed this evening by one of the most brilliant and successful torch-light parades ever seen in New-England, though many circumstances combined to detract from the numbers represented. The various organizations of Tanners and Grant Guards gathered on the Common at an early hour, and the scene was one of remarkable brilliancy. In every direction tanners were marching to the rendezvous in full uniform, each organization accompanied by a band of music. The transparencies displayed were numerous, and the mottoes sharp and in many cases very funny. One noticeable feature was a full-rigged ship, forty-five feet long, fully manned and drawn by ex-sailors in the navy. Promptly at 8 o'clock the column moved, preceded by Gilmore's Band. There was hardly a break in the line of illuminations from the start to the end of the march. The elegant residences on the Back Bay were finely lighted up with gas and Chinese lanterns. Fireworks were displayed at prominent points on every street through which the procession passed, and flags were hung out, and in many cases the letters "U. S. G." shone out everywhere in letters of light. The number in line is variously estimated at from 12,000 to 15,000. In any case it must fully equal in point of number any parade of former years, while in elegance of uniforms, excellence of discipline and good order, its equal was never seen, probably, anywhere. The men marched like veterans, and every man went through the four hours' march. The cavalry portion of the procession, which would have numbered 2,000 men, was prevented from appearing by the disease which has made pedestrians of us all. Nevertheless, the line was more than an hour passing a given point. Though the Democracy made a very creditable show four years ago, the screeheads will not attempt any parade this year. They could hardly muster half a thousand torches. In one ward where there is a Grant and Wilson regiment there is not even a solitary company of wood-choppers.

MARYLAND.

Grand Republican Meeting in Baltimore—An Astonisher in Reserve for the Fusionists.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 30.—There was an immense turn-out at the Republican mass-meeting held in Monument-square this evening. A magnificent stand, elaborately decorated, was erected about the centre of the north end of the square, for the accommodation of the speakers. Near it rose the skeleton of the stand to be used to-morrow night by the Democratic speakers at a Greeley and Brown ratification meeting. Before 4 o'clock the space around the stand was thronged, and by the time the presiding officer of the evening, Major George C. Castle, took his place a splendid assemblage was present. Among the Vice-Presidents announced was Gen. Felix Agnus, formerly of New-York. An accident on the Pennsylvania Central prevented Gov. Hartranft and Hon. James S. Negley, of Pittsburg, from making connection with the Northern Central at Harrisburg. Their absence was noticed, but atoned for by the excellence of the speeches of Col. L. S. Dudley, of New-York; Col. Wm. McMichael, of Philadelphia, and others.

Maryland, thought so sure for Greeley by an overwhelming majority, will surprise the fusionists, as the Republicans are working hard and unitedly.

NEW-YORK.

Gen. Butler, Gen. Warwick, and Gen. Noble at Watkins and Elmira—Three Large Meetings.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Oct. 30.—Gen. B. F. Butler, Gen. J. H. Warwick, and Gov. B. G. Noble spoke this afternoon to an immense mass-meeting at Watkins, Schuyler County, awakening great enthusiasm. This evening the two former spoke twice each in this city, in the Opera-house and the Wigwam, both halls being crowded to their utmost capacity, although the former alone was found entirely too large for the last Democratic grand rally last evening. All the southern tier, including Steuben, is wide awake, and will make a good report on Tuesday. E. C.

GREAT STORM IN KANSAS.

Solid Bits of Ice Falling—Two Days' Rain—Immense Damage Occasioned.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SOLOMON, Kansas, Oct. 30.—The country hereabout has been visited by one of the hardest and most destructive storms that has occurred in this section for over three years. On Monday the weather opened warm and very oppressive in its sultriness, with every indication of a rapidly approaching change. In the evening the thermometer began falling rapidly, and a furious rain-storm set in. During the night bits of solid ice, some of them weighing fully two ounces each, dropped down in large numbers, causing damage to window-glass and sky-lights. For the past forty-eight hours a heavy rain has continued to pour down, and the different streams in the neighborhood have risen high above their usual bounds, and in many places the country is being rapidly inundated. Reports are now coming in from the surrounding country to the effect that many herds of cattle have been scattered by the storm, and as it has now cleared off very cold, much loss is anticipated in consequence. ## THE STEAMER MISSOURI.

Further Particulars of the Burning of the Ill-Fated Vessel—A Heavy Gale Blowing and All But One Boat Swamped.

The following dispatches contain additional details of the burning of the steamer Missouri to those printed on the second page:

KEY WEST, Fla., Oct. 30.—The steamer Missouri, of the Atlantic Mail line, was burned at sea in a gale on the 23d inst., about twenty-five miles from Abaco, en route for Havana, via Nassau, N. P. Twelve persons were saved, as follows: George Tinckery, Enrique Yanco, W. F. Tunnell, Ebenezer Saunders, O. E. Outerbridge, James Culmer, and John Rehoa, passengers; Wm. Jones, seaman; Samuel Corn, seaman; Patrick McGowen, waiter; Lewis Bohme, pantryman, and Richard Murphy, second pantryman. The fire was discovered about 9 A. M. in the pantry, and suddenly burst out in volumes of flame amidships, spreading rapidly over the ship. The boats were launched immediately, and all but one were swamped at once. Those remaining on board were compelled, on account of the flames, to jump into the sea. These saved landed in one of the boats in Abaco about 6 P. M. on the evening of the 23d, and were taken from there in a small schooner to Nassau. It was a terrible sight for those in the floating boat to see those in the water clinging to the swamped boats, and hearing for assistance. There were about ten lady on board. It is not known whether any of the missing have since been picked up. It is said the Captain used every effort to save the lives of the passengers, working gravely himself with the hose. Three of the saved passengers are now here.

This information was brought here this afternoon by the steamer Anna, from Nassau, to the British Consul, and communications were sent to the Atlantic Mail Company's office in New-York. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Two of the boats of the ill-fated Missouri were burned alongside the vessel, and there is no probability that any of the others ever reached the shore. It is probable that not a single life would have been saved had it not been for James Culmer, a resident of Eleuthera and a passenger on board. A new boat had been purchased in New-York and placed on deck, but, as the weather had been boisterous, she had not been secured either by gripes or by shocks. Soon it was known that the vessel would go down. Culmer, with a few others, launched this boat, holding fast the painter. When he jumped overboard and swam to the boat eleven others followed him, and even then, had it not been for Culmer, who was acquainted with the management of a boat, and took charge and piloted her safely through the surf, she would have been lost with the others. The three passengers who are here were bound to Havana, and will be forwarded to that port by John J. Philbrick, the agent of the Atlantic Mail Steamship line at this port, who has taken every measure toward securing their comfort.

Further particulars will probably be received to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 30.—The Department of State has received a dispatch from Vice-Consul Saunders, at Nassau, announcing the loss by fire of the steam-ship Missouri. The only additional information is the names of the twelve persons saved, who formed a portion of the passengers and crew.

DELAWARE.

Republicans Working Like Beavers—Senator Wilson to Speak in Milford and Wilmington.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 30.—Delaware is in a perfect political ferment. The Republicans are working like beavers. Hon. J. F. Manning, of Massachusetts, and Wm. Nicholson, Esq., of Philadelphia, addressed a large meeting to-night in Wilmington. Senator Wilson will speak in Milford on Saturday afternoon, and in Wilmington, seventy miles distant, the same evening.

CONNECTICUT.

Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. Stanton Address a Large Republican Meeting in Hartford—Hawley to be Elected.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Oct. 30.—Mrs. Mary A. Livermore and Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton addressed the largest political meeting that has gathered in this city during the campaign, at Allyn Hall, this evening. The hall was crowded in every part. Gov. Jewell presided. The addresses of the ladies were very eloquent and the audience enthusiastic and responsive at every patriotic utterance. These ladies have done excellent service here for the Republican cause.

The First Congressional District is alive with meetings, and active political work is done on both sides. The Republicans are confident of Gen. Hawley's election over Eaton by a handsome majority.

A large mass-meeting in Rockville today was addressed by Gov. Jewell, Judge Thos. Russell, of Boston, and Gen. Hawley.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Tom Hughes Going Out of Politics—Reported Opinions of German Experts on the San Juan Boundary Question.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—Mr. Thomas Hughes has issued an address to his constituents of Frome, informing them that he will not stand as a candidate at the next election for member of Parliament.

A special dispatch to the Daily News from Berlin says the three experts to whom the Emperor William referred the San Juan boundary case, in their reports to His Majesty, recommended, as a compromise of the dispute, the adoption of the middle channel as the boundary line between British and American territory. The reports of the experts have not yet been published.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—Hon. John Jay, the American Minister to Austria, who came to London to be present at the marriage of his daughter, and has since remained here, left yesterday for his post of duty at Vienna.

The Marquis of Ripon, who presided over the High Joint Commission, which framed the Alabama Treaty at Washington, delivered an address, last evening, at Ripon, in Yorkshire, upon the results of the arbitration at Geneva. The speaker expressed himself as thankful that all the points involved in the Treaty of Washington had been peacefully and amicably settled. He regarded this as a great step toward the preservation of the peace of the world. Though, said the Marquis, the controversy between the two nations had been sometimes keen and eager, the feelings of the peoples, as well as of the respective Governments, had never become embittered.

He believed that the arbitration at Geneva had been the means of manufacturing good relations between England and the United States, which would long endure.

The cholera has appeared at Wexford, Ireland, where one death from the disease has occurred.

SPAIN.

Attempt to Obtain Possession of Gibraltar.

MADRID, Oct. 30.—A petition was presented to the Cortes today by one of the Republican Deputies asking the adoption of measures looking to the procurement from England of the cession of Gibraltar to Spain.

The Cortes has resolved, by a vote of 124 against 104, to consider articles of impeachment against the members of the Sagasta's Ministry.

HUNGARY.

Ravages of the Cholera.

BUDA, Oct. 30.—The cholera is making serious ravages here. Ninety-four cases are reported, of which twenty-seven have proved fatal. Among the cases are those of twenty-nine soldiers who were stricken ill simultaneously, and of whom five have died.

FRANCE.

PARIS, Oct. 30.—M. Louis Blanc, in an address to the Republicans of Avignon, demonstrates the necessity for the prompt dissolution of the National Assembly, and opposes the appointment of a President of the Republic, the Presidency being, in his belief, "a counterfeit royalty, which would perpetually endanger the liberties of the country."

A rumor is afloat in official circles that Gen. De Cissey will resign the Ministry of War in the event that an inquiry is ordered by the President into the conversation of certain army officers at La Ferte, who are charged with asserting that the Minister of War, and the members of his staff, entertained strong sympathies for the Bonapartes.

Count Von Arnim, the German Ambassador to France, has arrived here from Berlin.

The Wife of Prince Napoleon Allowed to Remain in France.

PARIS, Oct. 30.—President Thiers has informed Princess Clouilde, wife of Prince Napoleon, that she is free to remain in France without interference by the Government authorities, if she so desires.

ANOTHER PRIZE-FIGHT.

Seddons' "Mouse" Fights in an Eighth Ward Bar-Room—Winning the Fight, He is Cut to Pieces with a Bottle.

After the dispersal of the roughs who, on Tuesday night, gathered in Owney Geoghegan's to witness the fight between Steve O'Reilly, alias George Seddons' "Mouse," and Geoghegan's "Rat," which did not take place, the Mouse, elated by his success, came down town and brought up in Mike Coburn's saloon, corner of Crosby and Houston streets, about 2 o'clock yesterday morning. Alderman Masterson, Mike Donovan and Coburn were drinking at the bar. They congratulated the "Mouse," and Masterson said he would back him, as there was no one able to beat him at his weight. The party entered Reddy the Blacksmith's about 3 o'clock, and found Jim Fogerty, Patsey Johnson, Wick Coffee, and other sporting men there. Alderman Masterson said the Mouse was the greatest feather-weight in the United States, and that he would back him for $1,000. Fogerty replied he would set a boy that could beat the Mouse in ten minutes. Masterson said, "bring him along." Fogerty brought in a young sporting man named Billy Hall. They went to the room at the back of the store, and Hall and O'Reilly were stripped for the fight, when Tom Walsey, a brother of the Blacksmith, told them there should be no fighting, and that he would call in the Police. Masterson, Coburn and Donovan left, the Mouse remaining. Hall would not fight, and Al Haines, another young aspirant for the prize-ring, was named by Fogerty. O'Reilly said he would bet all the money he had, $50. The pugs adjourned to the saloon of Tom. Larkin (alias "Champlene Tommy," at the corner of Mercer and Houston streets. Larkin would not allow them to fight until they ordered $1 00 worth of drinks. This being done, he had no objection. The fight was then begun. O'Reilly, who is only seventeen years old, had not a single friend in the room. Haines was heavier, but had not science. In the first round, the "Mouse" got in a straight left-hand blow on Haines' neck, which knocked him senseless. Blood oozed from his mouth and ears. Fogerty gave Haines a bullet to clutch in his right hand. The "Mouse," who did not know that, prevented Haines from getting in any blow at his head, and finally gave him a clean knock down. In the third round, while the "Mouse" had Haines in "chancery," and was punishing him, Fogerty came up behind the "Mouse" and struck him on the head with a bottle, wounding him badly. This stopped the fight. Dick Canfield, who held the stakes, decided the affair a draw, because Haines was evidently beaten. The treatment of the Mouse by Fogerty drew loud cries of indignation among sporting men, and last night George Seddons went to Reddy's, and offered to back the Mouse for $1,000 a side against any feather-weight.

GRAND RALLY IN BROOKLYN.

An Enthusiastic Demonstration—Six Thousand Persons in Torch-Light Procession.

One of the largest public demonstrations witnessed in Brooklyn for many years was the torch-light Republican parade of last evening, composed of the Grant and Wilson Clubs of fourteen wards, and numbering between 5,000 and 6,000 supporters of the Republican nominations. The utmost enthusiasm was manifested by the inhabitants, and fireworks and illuminations were general in all the streets through which the procession passed. Several of the streets, including Washington-avenue, Lafayette-avenue, Schermerhorn-street, Clinton and Fulton streets, presented a gorgeous appearance as the living mass of flame poured itself along from 6,000 torches, while the magnificent display of fire-works, at intervals along the route, broke overhead in a flood of variegated colors, so as to vie with the sparkling stars in the clear blue heavens above, and for a time to eclipse their lustre. Everything appeared to favor the procession; not a breeze ruffled the calm tranquillity of the ground. As the evening twilight closed in upon the scene, the soul-stirring music of the several bands wakened up the vast multitudes thronging the street into cheer after cheer for Grant and Wilson. The ladies were particularly demonstrative on the occasion, and from the balconies and windows white handkerchiefs in promiscuous confusion waved a graceful and welcome salute, which was returned by the members of the several clubs as they passed. The streets were densely crowded—so much so that it seemed that all Brooklyn, from the oldest veteran politician to the youthful patriot, moving with more than a manly ardor, had turned out to manifest their enthusiasm in support of the Republican institutions of the country. Throughout the entire multitude assembled there appeared to be but one feeling, one desire for the success of the Republican candidate next Tuesday.

At 8:40 the Fourth Ward Grant and Wilson Club, and the Ferguson Guards, a colored organization, formed into line of four deep, opposite the Eleventh Ward Club, on Clinton-street, down Clinton-street to First-place, down First-place to Henry-street, up Henry-street to Montague-street, up Montague-street to Fulton-street, across Fulton-street to Washington-street, down Washington-street to Sands-street, along Sands-street to Bridge-street, up Bridge-street to Fulton-street, where the parade was dismissed.

Col. John Hall commanded the mounted escort, and was indefatigable in his exertions to promote the success of the entire programme, which was throughout creditably carried out. A large number of the citizens joined in the procession, carrying torches and banners with various emblematical mottoes. During the route nothing occurred to mar the success of the demonstration, and after the procession was dismissed the crowds of citizens quietly dispersed to their respective homes.

Local Notes.

The Tenth Ward Eighth Assembly District German Reform Association nominated, last evening, Martin C. Hoffmann for Assembly.

Mr. James Lynch will deliver an address before the Ninth Ward Republican Association, at Bleecker Building, to-morrow evening.

The name of one of the candidates for Alderman indorsed by the Committee of Seventy is not George Burckhardt, but George Burghard.

The First Assembly Republican Association last night indorsed Nicholas Muller for Assembly, and Thomas Foley for Assistant Alderman.

The Thirteenth Assembly District German Reform Association, at a meeting in Seventh-avenue last night, ratified the nomination of Mr. Havemeyer for the Assembly.

The Sixteenth Assembly District German Reform organization, Emil Unger presiding, held a ratification meeting at No. 252 Avenue A, last evening, ratifying the nomination of William F. Havemeyer for the Mayoralty.

J. C. Julius Langbein has been nominated by the German Reform, Soldiers and Sailors', Tax-payers', Polish and Hungarian Clubs as Assistant Alderman of the Eighth Assembly District.

The Eighth Assembly District German Independent Democratic Campaign Club, at a meeting in Sheriff-street last night, indorsed Grant and Wilson, Francis Kernan for Governor, and the Apollo Hall local nominations.

Francis P. Healy, who was charged with fraudulently registering from the house No. 253 Mott-street, was discharged yesterday by Commissioner Davenport, Healy having clearly established his right to vote.

The Tammanyites of the Twentieth Assembly District, held a meeting at Brevort Hall, last night. Mr. Abraham B. Lawrence made a speech, and said he felt certain of being elected Mayor, next Tuesday.

The Eighth Assembly District Young Men's Republican Association met last evening at No. 121 Allen-street, and indorsed the names of Conrad Geib for Congress, John H. Smith for Assembly, and John Theiss for Assistant Alderman.

The German Republican Association of the Twentieth Assembly District met last night, and indorsed William A. Darling for Congress, Dr. Kessler for Coroner, Wm. S. Opdyke for Assembly, and Herman Koene for Assistant Alderman.

Speaker Blaine and Secretary Boutwell called yesterday at Republican National Committee Headquarters, Fifth-avenue Hotel, and were received by Secretary Chandler. They express no doubt of the favorable issue of the National contest, and believe that New-York State is safe.

Affairs were very quiet at the head-quarters of the Greeley Republican National Committee, Gleason Hotel, yesterday. A large number of Mr. Greeley's political friends called and expressed much sorrow at the death of Mrs. Greeley, and sympathy for the affliction of their leader.

A card has been issued inviting "the friends of Commissioner Samuel A. Lewis, of the Department of Public Instruction," to a meeting this evening. Mr. Lewis is a candidate for Alderman, and it is rather questionable taste to have sent this circular to school teachers and janitors of schools.

A meeting of the Germans of the Fifth Assembly District, Charles Willer presiding, was held at No. 69 Vandam-street, last night. The nomination of Henry Wieser, the Republican and Reform candidate for Assistant Alderman, and the rest of the Reform ticket, was indorsed.

A meeting of the Fifteenth Assembly District Grant and Wilson Campaign Club was held last night at No. 346 West Thirty-third street. Mr. Hugh Turner in the chair. Mr. Wm. Pebbie delivered an address on the issues of the campaign. He urged the necessity of making all necessary exertions to contribute to the glorious victory of next Tuesday.

Pool-Selling on the Election—The Scenes at the Rooms Last Night.

Johnson's saloon, under Apollo Hall, at the corner of Broadway and Twenty-eighth-street, was crowded with gentlemen, representing all grades of society, from 8 o'clock last evening up to an early hour this morning. Mr. Johnson commenced with pools on the Mayoralty, the speculator starting with $100, which pool sold as follows: Havemeyer, $100; O'Brien, $60; Lawrence, $8. Several pools at the same rates were offered and sold, after which a pool of $100 was sold at the following price: O'Brien, $100; Havemeyer, $90; Lawrence, $5. A speculator put up a few times that Greeley would obtain 20,000 majority in the City, which were sold at prices ranging from $35 to $45, while pools worth $50, that Dix would gain the Governorship by 10,000 majority, were knocked down, as a rule, as follows: Dix, $60; Kernan, $35. A pool of $100, started by a speculator, that Grant would carry Ohio by 20,000 majority, was sold at $100 positive, negative $25.

Greeley stock was dull. Several pools of $100 and $50 were put up there, but not one sold the whole time our reporter was present. A single pool of $50, that Fernando Wood would carry the Ninth Congressional District, sold—Wood, $50; positive, $25; negative, $25.

To summarize the whole proceedings of the evening, it may be said that the betting on Havemeyer and O'Brien is even, and that the speculating on Lawrence's chance has declined at least twenty-five per cent since last night, while in reference to the State election, the Republican candidates are almost universally the favorites. It is almost unnecessary to add that Greeley stock remains as stagnant as it did on Tuesday night.

Mr. John A. Griswold.

A dispatch was received at this office at 2 o'clock this morning, stating that John A. Griswold, within the last twenty-four hours, had shown slight, but unmistakable signs of improvement.

A ROUSING RALLY.

the third cousin of the President's wife." [Applause.] And here is another one. The relation in this case is by Andrew Pickens, whose aunt Susan married Capt. Noah Grant, great-grand-father of the President, [applause,] showing the way near relationship of the President with the nepotic Postmaster. [Laughter.] I want to understand that the magnitude of this issue depends on the degree of consanguinity. It is the Postmaster's mother-in-law's father's aunt married the President's great-great-father, [loud applause and laughter,] and this brother-in-law of the man whose father's aunt was the mother of Gen. Grant's grandfather [applause] holds the position of Postmaster now at the very aggravated figure of $350 a year. [Applause.] And the Mr. Greeley infers, shows what very little hope there is for the Republic. Well, the other great issue that Mr. Sumner made out in his sixteen-page speech, which made him sick and necessitated a trip to Europe—the other great issue against the President—was his gift-taking. Now, Mr. Sumner asserts that never in this or in Europe was a very great military officer who had his services recognized by pecuniary recompense. This, I will show, is untrue. Ten years ago Gen. McClellan won the battle of Antietam—a victory very grateful to the people of this country. In the ensuing Winter the personal and political friends of Gen. McClellan presented him with a house, for which they paid seventy-five thousand dollars. Gen. McClellan, not wishing to reside in it, sold it for a larger sum. Gen. Sherman, who deserves well of his country, [applause,] was presented with a house in St. Louis and another in Washington, with some eighty or one hundred thousand dollars in money. I never heard it stated it was a scandal on his part. I have heard generous men of both parties say it should have been ten times as much, so much did he do for his country. Gen. Grant has received the same amount. Farragut and Porter, our two great naval heroes of the war received as prize money more than a quarter of a million each. I don't think it was lower. Perhaps Judge Pierrepont could tell me. I can well understand how a naval hero is entitled to such a consideration at the hands of an appreciative public. I say that if Gen. Grant received as much as Porter, in comparison to the services he rendered, he would be richer than Astor or A. T. Stewart, because the present to which Gen. Grant would be entitled, would be the entire Southern Confederacy. There are men here before me whose minds run back to the great battles in Europe, fought by the Duke of Wellington, when he was sent to the Peninsula to confront Napoleon I., and try his power in open amusement to him. When he drove Marshal Soult along the Pyrenees and conquered him, the English Parliament voted him, in a single evening, $500,000 in gold, and the Prince Regent, George IV. added five hundred thousand more. They gave him more than that—they gave him fifty thousand dollars a year pension. Two years after they canceled the pension, and gave him in a solid sum two million dollars in gold. That was before the battle of Waterloo was fought; and when the battle of Waterloo was fought, and news of victory received, the British Parliament gave him one and a half million in coin. He also received a present of a place in Strathfield Worth $115,000 in gold. They made him Marshal of the Realm, and made him Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, with nothing to do. If you take the simple instance of what was given to Wellington, it shows it to be more than was received by Gens. Grant and Sherman altogether. The Duke of Wellington fought in a war carried on through ambition. They were not wars that involved the perpetuity of the English nation. Gen. Grant won a victory which preserved the life of your nation. [Applause.] If the South had succeeded, they would have no necessity for discussing his candidature for the next Presidency.

WHAT GEN. GRANT DID FOR THE COUNTRY.

He did more for his country than Wellington did for his at the battle of Waterloo. Here the speaker went on at considerable length, showing that every great nation always rewarded pecuniarily its great and successful men, and added that since Gen. Grant took the oath of office on the 4th of March, 1869, he has never received from any man any favor in any form. He spoke of Gen. Sherman briefly and in good terms, and alluded to the scurrilous attacks of the Tribune on President Grant and the Administration. Gen. Grant's Presidency for the past four years was in every respect superior to the policy of the eight years previous to it. In conclusion the speaker quoted the language of the great apostle, which speaks of nations and individuals being made strong to resist the arms of the alien, &c.

The Chairman then introduced Hon. Wm. M. Evarts, Commissioner to the Geneva Arbitration, who, he said, had just returned with $15,500,000 in his pocket.

Mr. Evarts was received with great cheers. He said:

SPEECH OF HON. WM. M. EVARTS.

When, last night, at nearly 12½ o'clock, the pilot-boat brought to us some numbers of the daily papers, and I saw from the columns of the TIMES [cheers for the TIMES] that to-night was to be held, at the Cooper Institute, the last weekly meeting of the Republican Party, I determined that I would be here as one of the listeners to the distinguished public men who were to address you. [Applause.] For nearly a year withdrawn from all participation in public debates in this country, however great my interest in them, I had but one excuse, that it was for a public errand, and you read name that I was absent. [Applause.] Returning now, not without being watchful in my absence of the strange political occurrences that were passing at home, I, for three months at least, have known no feel that ever came to National, State and City in favor of the Republican Party and a pure and just Government, was entirely safe. [Applause.] Having that feeling, I can summit with what composure I may to the unanimously result of the very wise and stringent Election law—that I shall not be able to vote myself, [laughter,] but I assure you that in Europe, in the estimate of the wise and just public men of the great countries associated with us in making up the system of our civilization, the same and the treatment of a state name which is to result in the election of Gen. Grant [cheers] is but a new evidence that in the wisdom of the people and in the favor of Providence, the American nation has some protectors. [Cheers.]

The meeting then broke up, with cheers for Grant, Wilson and Dix.
